Youth Hockey thrives at the Devine Rink

By YUKUN ZHANG

REPORTER CORRESPONDENT It's Friday night at the Devine Memorial Rink near Neponset Circle and the kids from Dorchester Youth Hockey's Squirt A and B teams are blazing across the ice. It's their last practice after a championship season — both teams won state titles the weekend before— and it shows.

"This is not like our normal practice. This is just kids having fun," said coach Neil Janulewicz, whose son plays in Squirt B.

State park user fees could be deal-breaker for youth sports

By Jennifer Smith News Editor

A potential change in what youth groups are being asked to pay for the right to use statecontrolled sports fields is alarming some Dorchester organizations and prompting elected officials to consider ways to intervene.

Organizations like All Dorchester Sports and Leadership (ADSL), which, among other things, manages girls softball leagues, often rely on the use of state parks, which are managed by the state Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR).

Local officials including state Rep. Dan Hunt, state Rep. Dan Cullinane, former state Sen. Linda Dorcena Forry, and current state Sen.

Nick Collins, had secured what was effectively a fee waiver year over year for youth groups like the ADSL girls softball team, which plays and practices on the ballfields at Toohig Park on Gallivan Boulevard.

This year, Hunt said, that arrangement appears to have changed. And the difference could mean thousands of dollars in new costs that ADSL leaders say would be prohibitive.

Comments largely favor Dot Block plan

After an extended comment period, the mixed-use Dot Block project at the heart of Glover's Corner has a full mailbag tilting heavily in favor of approving the latest design. More than 150 discrete comments or statements of support were submitted between the start of February and March 15, along with about 60 in opposition. Ten commenters described themselves as neutral on the project.

Trolley study results to be discussed at three meetings

By Daniel Sheehan REPORTER STAFF

The Massachusetts Department of Transportation and the MBTA will host public meetings in Mattapan, Milton, and Dorchester in the coming weeks to discuss the results of the Mattapan Trolley Line Study.

The first session will be held on Wed., March 27 from 6 to 8 p.m. at the ABCD Family Service Center at 535 River St. in Mattapan; the second will take place on Tues., April 2 from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Milton Council of Aging at 10 Walnut St.; and the Dorchester meeting will be held on Thurs., April 4, from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Lower Mills Branch Public Library at 27 Richmond St.

At each meeting, Mass-DOT and MBTA representatives will present the results of the study and solicit feedback from members of the public. The findings from the study, which was commissioned by the T in 2017, were presented to the Fiscal and Management Control Board in late January. They cast doubt on the long-term viability of the orangecolored Presidential Conference Committee (PCC) trolley cars, noting that the vehicles "are over 70 years old and are approaching a point where further maintenance action and operation become impractical."

Regarding next steps, the T presented six alternative options to the board, including a scenario that would replace the aging trolley system with a bus line and another that would replace the PCC vehicles with brand new trolley

However, noting the public's strong opposition to a bus line and the cost-prohibitive nature of other options, the presentation ultimately cited the option of phasing in recently built "Type 9" cars — currently being introduced on the Green Line— for the PCC cars over the next 10 years as the preferred course of action.

Public meeting to focus on Moakley Park 'vision plan'

The fourth community meeting for the Moakley Park Vision Plan, scheduled for Thurs., March 21 in South Boston, will feature a "concept" plan and a discussion of what comes next toward implementation, according to city officials.

In three previous sessions, community members were invited to help re-design the park by identifying how they use it and what features they would like to see at the site. The final meeting will deal with the final concept and invite the public to give feedback.

The Thursday meeting will be held at the Ironworkers Union Hall on Old Colony Avenue from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Allison Perlman, project manager of Boston Parks and Recreation Department, said that attendees can expect to hear how a re-design of Moakley Park will relate to other nearby projects and larger plans for coastal resiliency. The vision plan hopes to transform Moakley Park into a buffer zone for climate change impact on Boston.

"A lot of the comments we received really informed the plan," Perlman said. "It's great to hear from people who've used the park for many years and people who live right next door but never used it."

Kathy Abbott, president of Boston Harbor Now, an organization that works "to realize Boston Harbor's full potential," said each time she saw the plan of the park, "it's getting better."

Abbott noted that Moakley Park, the largest waterfront park in Boston, is a major flood pathway to the city. As sea level rises, a Construction could start major storm could bring sea water across the park into South Boston, Dorchester, up to the expressway and even to the South End.

She added that the park needs to tie in with other elevated areas to protect the city against flooding. "How to make it a better park to serve the residents while at the same time developing it in such a way that it provides climate resiliency is really critical and an exciting drive for this whole thing."

The plan would maintain the athletic fields, she said, but diversify the uses of the park to serve more people. For instance, there could be grills for families to use in the summer.

Following the meeting, Perlman said, there will be studies on how the design considers coastal flooding before there is a move to implementation. in 2021, but "it's hard to say," she said.

US accuses Quincy of discharging sewage into area waterways

By Jennifer Smith News Editor

The federal government is suing the the city of Quincy for allegedly discharging sewage and untreated wastewater into Boston Harbor, Dorchester Bay, Quincy Bay and other waterways from the City's sanitary sewer and storm drain systems.

According to a statement from US Attorney Andrew Lelling's office, the practice violates the Clean Water Act. Working with the Department of Justice's Environment and Natural Resources Division, the office filed the civil complaint on behalf of the US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

"This complaint represents a critical step in the ongoing cleanup of Boston Harbor and nearby urban rivers," said Deb Szaro, Acting Regional Administrator of EPA's New England region, in a statement. "EPA is committed to ensuring the restoration of Boston Harbor and addressing sewage discharges in local communities continues in order to protect public health and clean water."

Quincy discharged pollutants, including bacteria known as E. coli and Enteroccous. onto Quincy beaches and tidal areas along the coastline, the federal complaint alleges. The between 2009 and 2018 from Quincy Bay, Sagamore Creek, Town Brook, Town River Bay and Furnace Brook that indicated sewage waste discharge.

Ammonia, surfactants, and pharmaceutical compounds were found in the samples.

Federal officers allege that Quincy's sanitary sewer system overflowed on numerous occasions, discharging sewage and untreated wastewater into the waterways. These pollutants can include "disease causing organisms, metals and nutrients that threaten our communities' water quality and can evidence was found in contribute to disease water samples taken outbreaks, beach and shellfish bed closings, flooding, stream scouring, fishing advisories and basement backups of sewage," the statement asserts.

Penalties levied for violating the Clean Water Act are $37,500 daily for each violation that occurred on or before Nov. 2, 2015, and $54,833 daily for each violation occurring after Nov. 2, 2015.

Describing himself as angry and disappointed, Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch said last Friday that the city is considering a countersuit against the federal government, adding that the city has spent tens of millions of dollars on environmental improvements in recent years. He also described the city's beaches as "safe" and pointed to frequent water quality testing.

"I do not believe we intentionally did anything this report.

improper," Koch said at a press conference with Congressman Stephen Lynch. He added, "This city has not ignored this issue. In fact, quite frankly, we've been proactive on this issue right along."

Said Lynch, "I wish that the EPA had shown a little bit of patience and also some contact with me."

A four-year-old letter letter, Walsh Construction Company said the piers that held the old Long Island Bridge were structurally deficient and not up to code, the Ledger reported. Boston closed the old bridge in 2014 with little notice, citing safety concerns. Last year, Boston Mayor Martin Walsh said he planned to build a replacement bridge, an announce-

The Patriot Ledger story quoted Quincy officials as saying "the letter, which they received through a subpoena in one of the city's ongoing lawsuits fighting Boston's plan to rebuild the bridge, supports their assertion that the piers are too old and deteriorated to support a new bridge."

BC High Icemen secure 2nd straight state title – in 4 OTs

By Daniel Sheehan REPORTER STAFF

A freshman on BC High's varsity hockey team scored the winning goal in a fourovertime 2-1 thriller against Pope Francis on Sunday night as the Eagles took their second straight Division 1 "Super 8" championship trophy back to Morrissey Boulevard.

The game broke the record for the longest recorded in Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) history, stretching past three and a half hours and totaling 87 minutes of ice time, or roughly the equivalent of two hour earlier, with just over full hockey games.

Declan Loughnane, a freshman defenseman, broke the deadlock with five minutes left in the fourth and final overtime period, attaining instant hero status. To some, Loughnane might appear an unlikely savior. But not to head coach John Flaherty.

"I was not really surprised," he told the Reporter. "He was having a great game, and he's had a great year for us. He's been an impact player all year."

Loughnane wasn't the only hero of the evening. Over an a minute to play in the third period. Joseph Kramer scored to give the Eagles their first goal and send the game into overtime. The last-minute theatrics were eerily similar to last year's victory, when after trailing through three periods, the Eagles scored with 51 seconds remaining and went on to win in overtime.

Another key performer for the Eagles was goalie Chase Congdon, who kept the puck out of his team's net for essentially six straight periods following the Cardinals' opening goal. "He made save after save," said Flaherty. "There were really three or four times when the game could have been ended by them if it weren't for him."

As one overtime period gave way to the next, Flaherty said, his players reached for any bit of energy they had left. At each break, he reminded them to "stay in the moment. We just kept talking about how, you know, you gotta believe you can get it done," he explained. "We're just one shot away from ending it."

For Flaherty, the craziness of the evening didn't completely register until afterward. Watching it after, it's got to be one of, if not the most, exciting high school hockey games that's ever been played," he said.

And his players can take pride in knowing that they weren't just a part of that historic game – they won it.

"Lifelong memories; that's what high school sports is supposed to be about," said Flaherty. "Now those kids can look back and see themselves in the record book, in the history

"I'm on the A team. We won every single tournament that we played in. We won the Waterville Mayor's Cup and the States," said Conrad Magoon.

That was hard. It was stressful. We went into a triple overtime," Michael Chuairy said. Other players echoed his remarks almost simultaneously.

"We have bragging rights," they agreed.

Almost everyone involved in the program said it's the dedication of the players, the parents, and the coaches of this tight-knit community that makes Dorchester Youth Hockey so successful.

competed in games on the weekends.

"The kids put the work in. That's what it is," said Janulewick. "They put the effort in, they became a team, they like each other, and they get along good. They want to help each other out and be there for each other on the ice."

DYH president Jeff Hampton emphasizes that everyone who works at the program is a volunteer, noting that it offers "the same if not more than those programs where parents will pay two, three, or four times what they will pay down here."

He added: "It's just a lot of fun to come to the rink every night to see the parking lot packed with cars and all the parents down here. Everybody helps with getting their children to the games and to practice. In the end, the program is reflexive of the neighborhood as a whole in how and help each other."

Nancy Conte, whose husband coaches and whose son plays on a DYH team, said, "Three times a week, plus all their homework, and plus games in the weekend. They work hard."

Rosemary Fitzgerald, whose two boys played on champion teams, said the kids are friends, the coaches are nice, and "they still keep it fun." She added that her sixyear daughter also wants to play.

Larraine Concannon, who took her grandson to the rink on Friday, said she has learned about hockey from watching her two sons play. Now, she teaches her grandson about the game at home.

Michael Misilo's son Thomas also practices at home—in the basement with a net, pucks, and shooting pads. "Practice makes perfect," the boy the go. Shaun O'Sullivan, DYH's vice president, said the program is one of the best in Boston, if not in the state, adding that it was designed to have different components in practice sessions, including competitions, expertise skills program and team practice and weekend games with other towns.

O'Sullivan also teaches at O'Sullivan Hockey Academy with his sister and brothers, all of whom have been involved with the program since their childhood days, before the Neponset and Dorchester programs were merged to form the current Dorchester Youth Hockey.

Chris O'Sullivan, now 44, played Division 1 at Boston University and then in the NHL. He said he always wanted to play at the highest level possible, but it all sprang from the hours spent at the Devine Rink in Dorchester. He says he owes a lot to all the past presidents and coaches.

"Our coach at Neponset used to bring us to the college games," said Chris, "and we would look at this kid from Quincy, and that kid from Dedham, and say to ourselves: 'Why can't I do it?"

He added that when the next generation of kids see them playing on TV, they know that that's a goal they can reach.

His older sister, Stephanie, also got her start with Dorchester Youth Hockey. She made it to the USA national team, and now splits her time between her work at the Boston Police Department and coaching hockey.

Stephanie started skating at age three in the 1970s, when the Big Bad Bruins were winning Stanley Cups, and every kid wanted to play hockey. "All the neighborhood kids the kids that you go to school with-were all in hockey," she said.

"We've always pushed ourselves," she said. "We came home from school and we played street hockey. When we competed against teams from other places, we always wanted to win. It's a passion."

Over the years, Stephanie noted, the hockey program has changed and developed, but Dorchester has always been a "very close-knit" community.

Added Michael Misilo as he sat next to Thomas on a bench,

"This community is so small, everything is so close. Right near the house we have a hockey rink. He can do one-onone with his friends."

When asked if he wanted to keep playing hockey, the son said: "A couple more years. Maybe, forever."

TWICE IS NICE FOR TECHBOSTON After back-to-back state championship titles, a basketball powerhouse emerges in Dorchester

By Daniel Sheehan REPORTER STAFF

Last year, the TechBoston boys basketball team made history, routing Taconic High School, 78-40, to bring home the school's first ever Division II state title. On Saturday, history repeated itself. After defeating Belmont, 61-53, in the semifinals on Wednesday at TD Garden, the Bears took on Taconic in the finals once again Saturday afternoon at Worcester Polytech and secured their second ring in two years, winning, 69-54.

Last year's squad was led by talented seniors, including key scorers Walter Dew-Hollis and Shamar Moore. This year, players like junior guard Shamar Browder (16 points) and senior Alan Nunez (15 points, 5 steals) stepped into the key roles. They led the way Saturday in a game where the Bears' defensive pressure forced Taconic to turn the ball over 22 times. Browder earlier had posted a game high 30 points in the semifinal win on the TD Garden's parquet floors, an experience last year's team was denied after a snowstorm forced the teams to use different venue. That was part of what made the past week "extra special," said Coach Johnny Williams.

"What made it extra special was that we weren't expected to do it this year," he said. "We lost so much. If you look at the preseason polls, a couple of them put us in the top 25; I think we were maybe 24 in one. They didn't expect us to do much; they thought it was a one-time thing."

But Williams isn't interested in

"We're a family," said the team's coach, Johnny Williams

one-time victories. He's looking to establish the roots of long term success at TechBoston. And now, with two straight state titles under his belt, he is beginning to turn heads with what he's doing on Peacevale Road.

"I'm trying to put together a program, not just good teams," he explained.

Any high school coach knows that winning state championships is about more than talent. Perennial contenders get to where they are, said Williams, because of a team mentality and a winning culture.

With that culture, it starts with being dedicated to getting the work done in the classroom first, and then being dedicated to the team – not yourself, but the team, being able to sacrifice at times your personal accolades for the accolades of the program. You can be a 20-point scorer, but on this given night I need to you to get 30 rebounds, do things of that nature. is being selfless."

One advantage to establishing that culture is the amount of time Williams has to build relationships with kids and watch them develop. TechBoston Academy is a 6-12 school, meaning that many of the basketball program's stars over the years, including Dew-Hollis and Moore, were brought under Williams's wing as 7th or 8th graders. His "team over everything" mentality was instilled in them from an early age.

"Once we get them to buy into that, the winning's gonna come," said Williams. "Winning's the easy part. Changing your whole mentality, that's where the real work's at - to convince a young man to sacrifice and put a mission and a goal ahead of his own personal accolades."

The result of everyone from the players to the coaches to the faculty buying in? A burgeoning powerhouse basketball program. And beyond that, a basketball family.

"It's all based on family," said Williams. "They know I care about more than basketball. Basketball is what's brought us together, but our relationship and what we build is what is making us family, working with them in school on a day-to-day basis."

Coaches don't want to see their players get in trouble, but going that extra mile and putting in that special care is necessary for coaches and educators alike in a neighborhood where gun violence is an unfortunate reality.

"They know I care," insisted Wil-

That's the difference; the difference liams. "My players make sure they get rides home because we know what's going on in the city, so we make sure to provide rides home, make sure we're in constant communication with guidance counselors so that the kids know if something's not going right, we're gonna hear about it. I've been in hospitals with players at two in the morning, with eight or nine of the guys and security asking us to leave the room 'cause we're too loud. If a guy's sick, we're all calling in to check on him. They see the sacrifice that the coaches make."

The concept of family runs so deep and is so important to the Bears family that they view it literally: a coach's wife is a 'mother bear'; their children are 'cubs.' Yet through the lens of the program, each TechBoston team is

This is a special team," said Williams. "It's just as special as last year's team, but these kids are doing it their own way. This is their identity."

Last year's team motto, born of a schedule that saw them play the majority of their games on hostile courts, pitted the Bears against the world: "We all we got." This year, Williams says, the low preseason rankings and wide-prevailing doubt about a TechBoston repeat had his kids playing "with a chip on their shoulders." It's a gritty, prideful attitude that one would expect to see in a determined group of city kids from Dorchester. But Williams understands that behind that determined front, it's all love.

"We're a family," he emphasized.

Mattapan High Speed Line Public Meetings

Join us at one of the following meetings:

Wednesday, March 27 6:00 PM-8:00 PM ABCD Mattapan

535 River St, Mattapan

Tuesday, April 2 6:00 PM-8:00 PM Milton Council on Aging 10 Walnut St, Milton

Thursday, April 4 6:00 PM-8:00 PM

Lower Mills Branch Public Library 27 Richmond St, Dorchester

Two years ago, the MBTA sought and received public input on the future of the Mattapan High Speed Line. The MBTA considered immediate and long term needs and as a result, $7.9M has been invested to upgrade the existing system and vehicle fleet to ensure continued service to the community for the next 8-10 years.

Join us at one of three public meetings the MBTA is hosting to learn about the results of the Mattapan High Speed Line study and share your feedback on this project.

MBTA. Welcome to a system of improvement.

Accommodations

All locations are accessible to people with disabilities. MBTA provides reasonable accommodations and/or language assistance free of charge upon request (including but not limited to interpreters in American Sign Language and languages other than English, open or closed captioning for videos, assistive listening devices and alternate material formats, such as audio tapes, Braille and large print), as available. For accommodation or language assistance, please contact Pat Nestor by phone 857-368-9018, or by email at patrick.nestor@dot.state.ma.us

Requests should be made as soon as possible prior to the meeting, and for more difficult to arrange services including sign-language, CART or language translation or interpretation, requests should be made at least ten (10) business days before the meeting. In case of inclement weather, meeting cancellation announcements will be posted on the internet at mbta.com

Page 6 THE REPORTER March 21, 2019 Art Project event a 'celebration of queer bodies for queer folks'

By OLIVIA DENG WBUR

In a dimly lit cavernous room at Dorchester Art Project in Fields Corner, more than a dozen people sit on the floor with charcoals, paintbrushes, and pens in hand eying a model who strikes poses for the artists to observe and interpret. For two hours, illustrators ranging from beginner to experienced record their subject on

This figure-drawing workshop celebrates queer and transgender bodies. Tracy Huerta says the series, organized by artist Kal Anderson, first caught their eye on Facebook. Having attended other workshops both as a drawer and a model, Huerta said oftentimes people just assumed they were cisgender. But these queer and trans figuredrawing workshops were different, they said.

"The fact that they center queer and trans people and people of color and different body shapes is something I was interested in drawing and just being in that atmosphere," Huerta said. They've now drawn and modeled during these DAP workshops. "There's a certain respect and understanding and openness to interpreting your body in a different way because people know that the people who are modeling are gender nonconforming or trans."

Anderson's exhibition, 'The Figure is Queer,' which opened March 15 at DAP, is a culmination of the workshops that started last summer. He said the show primarily features submissions from workshop attendees. Those works range from quick sketches done at the workshops to completely finished pieces done outside of the workshops.

Anderson, who primarily does landscape and seascape paintings, found himself enjoying figure drawing and founded the group to fill the need of a queer and trans inclusive figure-drawing space. The monthly two-hour sessions featured a different model, who choose their poses and levels of nudity. The model starts with short poses, then longer poses. Attendees bring their own supplies, with many opting for charcoal and pen.

"I find it really important ... to do it in a community," Anderson said. "To see somebody who is non-binary and watch them for two hours or somebody who's fat or black or all of the above. I think it's really powerful to say that someone is worth paying attention

Artist Lauren Alindogan, a Massachusetts College of Art and Design graduate, said they enjoy being a part of a group where trans and gender nonconforming bodies are represented, something that is lacking in "mainstream studios." Besides the workshops at DAP, they have also attended smaller ones held in living rooms that are intimate, but having one in a gallery space adds a level of professionalism that these models deserve.

Alindogan, whose artwork will be in the upcoming show, said that the queer and trans figure-drawing workshops at DAP gave them the opportunity to expand beyond their previous experiences at figure-drawing sessions.

"I really appreciated the opportunity at Dorchester Art Project to be like, 'OK, I really have to hunker down and get these details right so it looks authentic to the person I'm depicting.' It's provided me an experience to draw a gender nonconforming body, very distinct facial features of this African-American person I really didn't encounter in other studios in my time at art school or other drawing studios," they said. "It's more likely to happen in a queer and trans and POC-friendly environ-

From a modeling perspective, Alindogan said body acceptance is especially important within the LGBTQ community. "Even within this community we all want to be beautiful and inclusive it still kind of like ends up feeling kind of like skinny, white," Alindogan said. "The act of drawing is like the act of recording... There needs to be more than the skinny idealized image of us. There needs to be a realistic depiction of who we are and how we live." Being comfortable with their bodies and showcasing them is critical in advancing body positivity in the LGBTQ community.

For some, modeling is a way to achieve that. Jory Cherry, a third-year art student at Lesley University, said that as a model for one of the sessions, they felt at ease with their body. (Full disclosure: Cherry and I know each other socially.) "I felt comfortable, as comfortable as you could be doing that for the first time. And I understood how hard of a job that it was. I think by doing it myself I gained an even larger respect for it and the ability to be vulnerable in a space like that with your body and also be on your toes in terms of thinking of poses every minute or every five minutes and maintaining those positions."

Anderson said while he finds the Boston arts scene pretty queer-inclusive, it is not as POC and ability-inclusive, leaving queer and trans POC and disabled folks behind in some cases. That's why his group is important in a "community care"

"Is this group going to give people the care and social feeding to be able to do more work outside of this? I think so. Art that is political can teach others and art that is political could be for the target demographic itself," Anderson said. "This event is by queer and trans for queer and trans and the gallery showing will absolutely be open to the public. But in my mind, it is a celebration of queer bodies for queer folks to give them the energy and the love that we need."

An exhibit telling the story of the Irish in Boston makes its debut at holiday breakfast

By Daniel Sheehan Reporter Staff

A City of Boston Archives exhibit on Irish Immigration that was unveiled Sunday at the annual St. Patrick's Day Breakfast will soon be on display and open to the public at City Hall.

"The Irish and Boston: An Immigrant Saga" is a 14-panel display featuring a collection of historical photographs, documents, and statistics pertaining to the Irish presence in Boston from the initial waves of immigration to the time of the Great Hunger to the Irish rise to power in the political arenas of the city.

While the breakfast is typically characterized by levity, the exhibit, curated by City Archivist John McColgan and his team at the Boston City Archives, lent a measure of solemn historical perspective to the event. Although it focuses on migration from Ireland, it also recognizes the parallels between all immigrants who have come to Boston over the generations as well as the ways that all immigrant groups have contributed "significantly to Boston's business growth, employment, and tax revenue, as well as its cultural diversity."

State Sen. Nick Collins of South Boston, the host of the breakfast, hailed the timeliness of the exhibit: "I was blown away at the scope and presentation of the exhibit curated by John and his team," said Collins. "It helped set the stage for the St. Patrick's Day Breakfast, but it also highlighted that immigrants are not our enemies, they are our neighbors, our friends, they are us.

"I can't thank the Archives enough for this impactful collection, and I hope everyone in the city has an opportunity to see it."

First there was the Dorchester and Milton Bank, which opened in 1832. In 1850, robbers took away $32,000 and the printing plates the bank used to make its notes. In 1851, the name was changed to Blue Hill Bank. And on Oct. 3, 1864, the bank obtained a national charter, and took on the name Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester.

In 1872, the bank moved to the brick building shown in today's illustration, which was located at the corner of Washington and Richmond streets, a block north of the early bank building. E.J. Bispham became president and S.J. Willis was named cashier in 1876.

In 1882, the bank was moved to the Associates Building in Milton and renamed the Blue Hill National Bank of Milton.

That same year, the building at the corner of Richmond Street was sold to the city of Boston. Station 11 of the Police Department was for a long while located here, and the Lower Mills branch of the Boston Public Library operated from this building for many years.

It is now a private residence.

The check in the illustration was written Nov. 4, 1876, and was signed by George Vose, the bank's treasurer. The two-cent Internal Revenue stamp affixed to the upper right corner was the result of the US government creating the Internal Revenue Service to raise money for expenses during the Civil War. It took in taxes on mortgages, bonds, contracts, bank checks, and other documents. The original bank check tax was instituted in 1816; it required a two-cent ing at the corner of Richmond tax on each bank check above Street, was sold to the city the amount of $20.

During the Civil War, the National Banking Acts included provisions limiting the issuance of bank notes to federally chartered institutions. The US Treasury began to issue circulating notes, and by the 1880s the Treasury was issuing large quantities of paper currency, an action that eventually eliminated the use of state bank notes and national bank notes in the period from 1870 to 1900.

It's one last lap for Charbo's Run

Mark S. Charbonnier died in 1994. There's a whole generation of Dorchester people who weren't here to witness the trauma of his death and the outpouring of support for his family that followed.

So, it's no surprise that this weekend's Charbo's Run — the road race in his memory that has not hit the streets in a decade— will seem like a new event on the local calendar to many. But for those who were around for the first Charbo's Run in 1995, it will mark a poignant return for a dynamic salute to one of our fallen neighbors.

Mark Charbonnier

Mark Charbonnier was a Massachusetts State Trooper who was shot and killed by a felon whom he had stopped on Route 3 in Kingston. His sudden, violent death at age 31 was a horrible moment for the law enforcement ranks and, of course, for the entire state. But it was a particularly devastating blow here in Dorchester, where Mark was born and raised.

He was a product of St. Peter's Parish who was revered by peers who saw him as a "class act," someone whose devotion to his neighborhood and friends was extended in due time to all his fellow citizens when he swore an oath to protect and defend them as a state policeman. His abbreviated six-year career was one of distinction and the gravity of his loss ripples still in the neighborhood he loved passionately.

Last May, a group of his friends and former colleagues gathered along the Neponset River to dedicate a beautiful new memorial named for Mark and his childhood friend, Ricky Dever, another law enforcement officer from Dot who was killed in 2005. At the dedication, his brother Steve Charbonnier - a Boston police officer— captured the importance of remembering his brother and his sacrifice:

"I miss Mark every day. This memorial ... tells the story of Mark and Ricky, but also much, much more. It tells the story of how they lived, who they were, and about the family and friends they left behind."

But, as Steve said that day, the story continues. Over the ten years of Charbo's Run-along with an annual golf tournament in his name that is still going strong annually - his friends and family have raised close to $1 million. Much of the funds have gone to set up perpetual scholarships in Mark's name at schools like Catholic Memorial, BC High, New England School of Law, Wenthworth Institute of Technology, and St. Brendan School.

The funds have also gone more quietly to local causes, including youth sports leagues in his native Dorchester.

The 25th anniversary of Charbo's Run will continue that effort and re-introduce a new crop of young men and women to Mark's story. At its peak, the race drew as many as 8,000 runners, making it one of the largest races in the state. It's not likely to hit that high-water mark this Sunday, but there will certainly be detours and road closures along the race route.

But here in Dorchester, it's considered an honor for our community to host an event that salutes one of our own and his family—whether they be related by blood or by the badge. A quarter century later, Trooper Charbonnier's life will be celebrated once again on the streets of his hometown.

Off the Bench

In the winter of my life, I think of what I believe

By James W. Dolan SPECIAL TO THE REPORTER

Well, I made it! Days are shorter, clocks are louder, and everyone's younger. I'm eighty. I have loved and been loved, laughed and cried and observed the immense goodness and profound evil of which mankind is capable. I will die with few regrets after a long and fortunate life. Will it be quick or slow and debilitating? I pray for an expedited passage.

To where, I'm not sure.

James W. Dolan

I can't quite accept the idea of oblivion although non-existence is not so frightening. After all, it's where I came from. I was quite content to be a non-being before my birth in 1939. Having had no choice in the matter, I accepted my fate and enjoyed a good life, often for reasons having nothing to do with merit. My advantages were no more deserved than the disadvantages that others, less fortunate, experienced. Life is just too complicated for me to believe it's all arbitrary, without purpose or design? Are poverty, pain, and suffering just accidents of birth?

Born and bred a Roman Catholic, I will die in the faith despite misgivings when the church so often fails to live up to the virtues it professes. Like a failed parent, it disappoints but I cannot abandon it. Human weakness is reflected, even magnified within institutions, secular and religious. I believe in evolution and reject the notion that an Original Sin was passed down through generations. Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden are characters in a parable. It is the capacity to sin (an essential component of free will) that we refer to as "original sin."

Prominent among the reasons for my faith are how I was raised and educated and my career as a judge. Man-made law is a necessary but inadequate vehicle to assure justice, individual or social. I believe in transcendent values, virtues necessary to order human behavior, and in ultimate justice, a reckoning in which we answer to a merciful God for how we lived. Christianity is not the only path to salvation. There are many ways to achieve union with God.

Without free will, we would be robots, incapable of choosing good or evil. Not responsible for our actions, we could not be blamed or rewarded for our behavior. Knowing that in the exercise of free will, mankind would make bad choices (sin), Christ died to atone for our failings, past and present. I view love as the fundamental virtue from which all others flow. Love, truth, justice, mercy, compassion, and forgiveness are not malleable human artifacts but transcendent absolutes.

Temporal justice is limited; it measures a person's compliance with the law. Absolute justice is far broader; it measures a person's capacity to do good or evil against his or her life. It takes into account a host of mitigating factors such as mental health, intelligence, education, genes, environment, opportunity, poverty, and deprivation. It is a judgment based upon knowledge only a deity could possess. Under such an all-encompassing and merciful standard, many who broke man-made laws would be found innocent while others who never saw the inside of a courtroom would be found wanting. Hopefully, there is a reckoning when the unfairness of life is somehow balanced and those who suffered through no fault of their own are rewarded.

To be virtuous, one need only comply with two commandments: Love God and love your neighbor. For something more specific, the Beatitudes will do. Salvation is not exclusive to any religion or even a belief in God so long as you strive to lead a virtuous life. If you love God, you must love your neighbor (everyone), and if you truly love your neighbor, in so doing you are loving God even if you question his existence. I happen to believe in a loving and merciful God who condemns very few to what we think of as hell, which is more likely the denial of union with God than fire and brimstone.

To doubt is human. If faith is the affirmation of hope, one must confront and struggle to overcome doubt. Those who never doubt have not considered the contradictions so evident in philosophy, theology, and religion. I remain unsure but committed nonetheless. As winter's chill becomes more pronounced, I trust in the Lord. What have I got to lose? If I'm wrong, I will never know. If I'm right, what a relief! Blaise Pascal, a 17th century French mathematician, scientist, and philosopher, first identified what became known as "Pascal's Wager." Since it is impossible to conclusively prove the existence of God, he concluded, the wiser course was to believe.

Lightning tears the night sky. Thunder trembles in the distance. A cool breeze from the north, The leaves begin to fall.

The mornings, cool and crisp Formations of birds wing south. Bright colors dance in the trees And the leaves fall.

Dawns are bright but cold; Walkers in sweaters and gloves. Muted now, the colors fade And the leaves fall.

The day is cold and gray, Sweet holidays have passed. Bare branches pray for sunlight And the leaves are gone.

The storm envelops me As snowflakes sting my face. Looking down to gauge the depth. I cannot see my footprints.

Like leaves, there is no trace As we flash and drift away. The fate we share in winter, When footprints are erased.

James W. Dolan is a retired Dorchester District Court judge who now practices law.

A message to the kids of Dorchester

From their neighbors in Lower Mills

There was a big party on Saturday night, March 16, in our neighborhood to celebrate St Patrick's Day. The location was the park at the Point off Medway Street and Ventura Street across the river from the Milton Yacht Club. Here's what we found:

Garbage from a trash can was dumped on the ground for a trash can fire. Trees were broken. Bottles and cans were broken and thrown all over the woods and in the river.

This is not just your territory. You cannot just do what you want.

The woods are so cool to get really stfaced. You just assume that someone else will clean

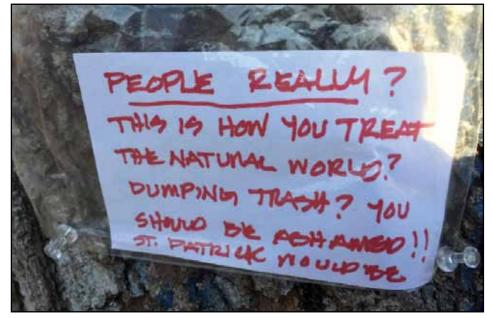

While other kids around the world were marching against climate change and for the environment - You all were partying, trashing the woods and leaving a big mess.

A message from your neighbors: We spent hours collecting, cleaning up, and putting your trash in bags. No one came by from your group to clean up or to even look at what you had done. NO ONE!

Some day we're going to be gone and you will have to take over. This is a really bad start.

You'd better get it together soon. Peter Byerly

Chambers eyes multi-story building for his Honda site at 720 Morrissey Boulevard

The existing Herb Chambers Honda dealership at 720 Morrissey Blvd. would be replaced with a new building under a plan now in a design phase.

(Continued from page 1) which gears and later proposed a larger building on the same site to sell Jaguars and Land Rovers— an idea that never came to fruition. He sold the property at 75 Morrissey Blvd. to New York-based developer Centre Court which will be a larger building on the form and the same site to sell Jaguars and Land Rovers— an idea that never came to fruition. He sold the property at 75 Morrissey a larger building on the same site to sell Jaguars and Land Rovers— an idea that never came to fruition. He sold the property at 75 Morrissey and developer Centre Court in 2017.

The current site, which he acquired last fall, is roughly two acres and fronts along the northbound stretch of Morrissey near Victory Road.

"We wanted to move from Commonwealth Ave to Morrissey Boulevard and I wish I could have purchased more space," said Chambers, who noted that he had explored buying the former Old Colony House restaurant, which is on the market.

Instead, he said, he now plans to construct a new building—still in the design phase—on the southernmost corner of 720 Morrissey. The Honda dealership will remain open in its current quarters while construction takes place, he said, acknowledging that the build-out will be "incredibly challenging."

"We are planning a multi-story building with service and admin on the first floor and the showroom on the second floor and maybe a third and fourth story," said Chambers, who said he hopes to begin construction later this year. The cost is not yet set, but he expects it could approach a $20 million investment.

The current building, which dates to the 1960s, is "very difficult" for both customers and staff, he said. However, the location—he thinks—is a winner.

"Hondaisthrilled about it," said Chambers, who notes that Expressway Toyota—located farther up the boulevard—"does very well there. I know the dealership will do very, very well."

Public comments largely favor latest Dot Block plan

Several local business owners and nonprofit members weighed in on the longstanding need to improve the disused lot, which was industrial space before demolition last year.

"This development is very important for our amazing Dorchester neighborhood," wrote Kenneth Osherow, who owns several businesses, including McKenna's cafe and Savin Bar and Kitchen. "Currently this area is a vacant wasteland filled with trash, drugs, and prostitution.

depressing eyesore and a huge detractor from our neighborhood. We are in desperate need of additional residential housing, we need more working people in our neighborhood, and we need more options for retail, restaurants, and other neighborhood amenities."

His comments were echoed by others, including Mary Kinsella of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Dorchester. She called the current site "in desperate need of change and improvement," and is looking forward to the mixed-use project "drawing people into congregating and fostering a new and brighter community for everyone."

An aerial view of the new design.

On top of submitted comments through the

BPDA website, some 70 people around the Dot Block area signed physical statements process. of support, which are included in the total comment tallies. Said Columbia-Savin Hill Civic Association president Desmond Rohan of the project, which sits inside the association's bounds, "Let's make Dot Block happen. Our community is in need of housing and amenities and Dot Block will make a small difference in contributing to solving these problems.

"The project will be a catalyst for further investment in our community and its exciting. It's great to finally see development in Dorchester," he added.

A major link between objecting commenters was participation in pro-affordable housing and anti-gentrification groups like Dorchester Not For Sale (DN4S) and Dorchester People For Peace, which have objected to the overall affordability standards and the community

The development team is proposing about 20 percent of the apartments as compact units. Of the 66 income-restricted units, 24 are being offered at affordability levels below the Inclusionary Development Policy requirement of 70 percent area median income, including 45 percent, 50 percent, and 63 percent area median income options distributed proportionally across the varying types of units.

Mary Regan said the project should adhere to the DN4S standards they proposed at a public meeting attended by Mayor Martin Walsh. "After going through our own neighborhood process with Dorchester residents from the Vietnamese, Cape Verdean, Black, Latinx and White Working Class communities, residents have created a vision that includes the need for 65 percent of new housing within the complete Glover's Corner planning area to be truly affordable to families making under $50,000 per year," Regan wrote, adding that "13.5 percent affordable units in the Dot Block project is NOT enough.

"Our neighbors are being displaced every day," she added. "The majority of the 'affordable units' in DotBlock are for people making 70 percent of the area median income, which is NOT affordable for most Dorchester residents. The AMI does not reflect the actual incomes of Dorchester residents.'

Fields Corner resident Angelina Hua of the DN4S echoed comments that she had made at a prior public meeting, citing the cultural richness of the area.

"Dorchesterismyhome and where families like mine can afford to live. Dorchester is where my Vietnamese community is," she said. Hua was irked by the initial lack of Vietnamese translation at the public meetings and the speed of the community process to discuss the change of project proposal, adding, "There are people who want to join the conversation and give their input, as Dorchester residents who love Dorchester and are invested in the community, but cannot because there's no translation."

Members of civic associations whose territory does not directly include the Dot Block project offered mixed reviews.

Will Cole-French, president of the Hancock Street Civic Association wrote: "I believe this developer needs to go back and find the funding to double the number of affordable units for this proposed complex. The CPA [Community Preservation Act] funds are readily available and there may be other sources as well. While it is great that they have calculated the income formulas using data specific to the city of Boston, I would still like $to\,see\,them\,go\,beyond\,the$ MINIMUM requirement for the total number of affordable units."

Steve Bickerton, development chair at Cedar Grove Civic Association, wrote in support. "Glover's Corner is in need of major investment and Dot Block will breathe new life into this long-neglected piece of property that will bridge Savin Hill and Fields Corner," Bickerton said. "It's imperative that a small group of vocal detractors not derail this project. This investment has been years in the making and it's time to put shovels in the ground and create the jobs, housing, and economic opportunity that this development will bring!"

All 130 pages of comments can be found on the BDPA's project page: bostonplans.org/ projects/developmentprojects/dot-block. The next step for Dot Block is to return to the BPDA board at a time yet to be determined.

Fostering: A Rewarding Challenge

Yoda (the smaller of the two) was found in a cardboard box on a sidewalk in Chelsea – he was actually adopted by his foster parent. Liam was found as a stray and had suffered a ruptured eye ulcer due to an untreated infection. He needed the eye removed, and fortunately vision has improved in his remaining eye. He needed several weeks in foster care following his surgery.

By Mary Nee

For any animal shelter, a reliable, responsible, and experienced foster care network is invaluable. While the majority of dogs and cats that come to the Animal Rescue League of Boston (ARL) find new homes in a matter of days, there are times when an animal needs time away from a shelter setting – and that's where foster parents come into play.

When you open up your heart and home as a foster parent, you're freeing up precious shelter space for other animals in need. But you're also giving the animal the personalized attention, care, and love they need and setting them up for success when they're ready for a forever home.

Foster animals come in all shapes and sizes – dogs and cats, of course, but also horses, pigs, and other livestock, and rabbits and other small animals.

Foster commitments can range from a week to several months and typically involve animals that may have a medical condition that needs monitoring, are shy, or have experienced trauma and need care and support for a short period of time.

Spring marks the beginning of kitten season, and there will be cases where foster parents seeking a more challenging assignment are needed for homeless newborn kittens. This entails around-the-clock bottle feeding every 3-4 hours, litter box training (and assistance with going to it), and providing a safe, warm area for the kittens to nestle.

Additionally, animals that are involved in a pending animal cruelty trial must be held as evidence and are typically sent to foster care instead of a shelter.

A shelter environment can be stressful, and a foster home cango a long way to alleviate that stress. It also allows for an opportunity to assess behavior in a home setting that can help determine the type of home the animal would be best suited for.

Being a foster parent also requires patience and understanding for the animal's specific needs. This means exercising positive reinforcement and understanding that the occasional accident, chewing, or scratching incident is a likely possibility.

Freeze on UMass tuition possible, says VP, citing legislative vote

News Service

The University of Massachusetts could freeze tuition and fees for in-state undergraduate students next year, a UMass official said on Monday, if lawmakers agree to a $26 million funding increase. Otherwise, a fifth consecutive year of tuition hikes could be on the horizon.

Lisa Calise, senior vice president of administration and finance at UMass, who presented the university's fiscal 2020 funding request to legislative budget writers, said that the $$568.3 \, \text{million} \, ask \, for \, the$ five-campus system is a \$26.2 million increase over fiscal 2019.

"UMass has worked to maintain a low cost per student, and we will be able to do so by freezing tuition for in-state undergraduates if our FY '20 budget request is fully funded at $568.3 million," Calise told the Joint Ways and Means Committee. Gov. Charlie Baker tuition hikes for UMass "Without full funding of that budget request, the university will need to implement modest and reasonable tuition increases for FY '20.'

Calise called the request "an attempt to mitigate tuition increases." She said nearly $12 million would fund collective bargaining increases and the remainder would go toward fixed costs. including financial aid.

In his budget request, funded the UMass line item at $558 million.

Responding to a question from Rep. Hannah Kane, Calise said the state appropriation in fiscal 2019 covered approximately 22 percent of the university's $3.4 billion overall budget.

In 2018, UMass raised tuition by 2.5 percent for in-state undergraduates, or an average $351 per student, marking the fourth straight year of students after a two-year freeze that ended in 2015. Out-of-state tuition went up 3 percent, or an average of $938 per student.

When UMass trustees approved the 2.5 percent bumplastJuly,thePublic Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) noted that the increase was smaller than previous years but said it would put "a college education out of students and families and add even more debt onto the already massive debt burden forced upon Massachusetts students and families."

PHENOM is hosting an advocacy day at the State House on Thursday (March 21) where students from UMass, state universities, and community colleges are scheduled to participate.

COLORECTAL CANCER SCREENING

Cancer is the second leading cause of death in the United States, exceeded only by heart disease. One of every four deaths in the United States is due to cancer. Colorectal cancer is the fourth most common cancer in the United States and the second leading cause of death from cancer. Colorectal cancer affects all racial and ethnic groups and is most often found in people ages 50 and older. In 2015, the latest year for which incidence data are available, 140,788 new cases of Colon and Rectum cancer were reported, and 52.396 people died of Colon and Rectum cancer in the United States. For every 100,000 people, 38 new Colon and Rectum cancer cases were reported and 14 died of cancer.

The best way to prevent colorectal cancer is to get screened regularly starting at age 50. There are often no signs or symptoms of colorectal cancer - that's why it's so important to get screened.

To increase awareness about the importance of colorectal cancer screening, Whittier Street Health Center is proudly participating in Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month. In 2015, the latest year for which incidence data are available, 140,788 new cases of Colon and Rectum cancer were reported, and 52,396 people died of Colon and Rectum cancer in the United States. For every 100,000 people, 38 new Colon and Rectum cancer cases were reported and 14 died of cancer.

People over age 50 have the highest risk of colorectal cancer. You may also be at higher risk if you are:

- African American
- Smoke
- Have been diagnosed with inflammatory bowel disease: Crohn's or Ulcerative colitis
- Have a family history of colorectal cancer
- Lifestyle factors such as lack of physical activity, alcohol consumption, tobacco use, amongst others

Call WSHC to make an appointment today for a colorectal screening today.

State park user fees could be deal-breaker for youth sports

"They're not raising the rates this year, but they are actually charging them the full price," said Rep. Hunt, although the youth group still is not sure what the final damage might be.

The softball team plays an eight-week season with four divisions, using the field almost every day, according to ADSL executive director Candice Gartley. Toohig Park has become central to the league's play, she said, but moving to more affordable city-managed Town Field may be necessary.

"It has an enormous impact," Gartley said. The popular program managed by the nonprofit has "grown exponentially over the past few years," she said, to 224 girls.

"The softball supports our other programs for the community that are underserved and under-resourced, so we rely pretty heavily on the revenue from this particular program,' said Gartley.

The DCR website lists $seasonal \, rentals \, for \, fields \,$ at $200 for one 2-3 hour block per field, per day for the season, and after the 2-3 hour block is up, $40 per hour per field, per day for the season.

This could run the program upwards of $12,000 for the season, depending on how the hourly uses are calculated. Last year

(Continued from page 1) they were never invoiced despite reaching out to DCR, Gartley said, and one year they were assessed only $200.

An agency spokesperson said, "The DCR looks forward to reviewing the All Dorchester Sports and Leadership (ADSL) Girls' Softball Program's application once submitted to the agency."

DCR did not comment on any policy change aside from noting that the fees themselves were not raised. It is unclear what the specific outcome will be for ADSL, but in resposne to multiple Reporter inquiries, DCR said organizations can still qualify for the waived $200 seasonal fees with documentation of non-for-profit status and providing free or low cost programs. Gartley is waiting to see what the department levies once their application is received. They just cannot swing the full potential charges, she said. Even the base $60 participation fees are barely affordable for some families.

"Sixteen percent of our budget is from city grants that come in from year to year," Gartley said. "The other 84 percent, I have to beat the bushes, beg, raise the money, write grants, go out and meet people to try for donations.

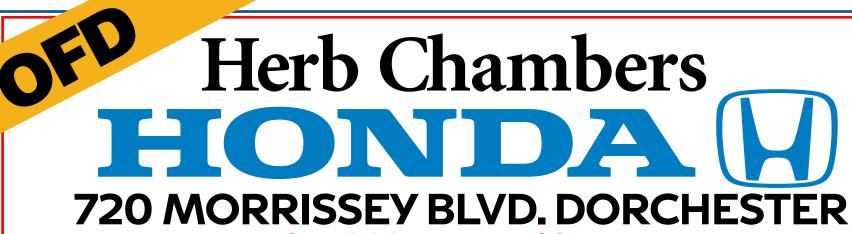

It takes most of my time just to keep the door open. To come up with that additional money... it's not a drop in the bucket."

Elected officials are on the receiving end of calls about the potential change, but the DCR's wobbly finances have become an annual negotiation on the state level.

In the House's 2018 budget, Hunt attempted to amend the section dealing with DCR's revenue retention. DCR is allowed to keep 80 percent of the revenue it raises, which was expected to be about $25 million, but Hunt's amendment would have mandated "that youth permit fees shall not be included" among the retained revenue fees. This would have effectively discouraged charging youth sports for the purpose of generating more revenue.

Hunt plans to refile the amendment this budget season. Okaying the change to DCR's finances was intended to let them keep more of their fees in parking lots, roadways, and the like, he said. "It was not intended for DCR to then go raise revenue on youth sports."

Other local teams also rely reserving state land. Dorchester Youth Soccer uses the Pope John Paul II soccer fields, which DCR controls, so they, too, are eyeing a new potential financial burden. Ventura Park in Cullinane's district is also used for Little League baseball.
