At long last, the Morton/Gallivan rehab is ready for a go; next Monday's the day

By Kevin Perrington-Turner Reporter Correspondent

About 70 people gathered at a Mattapan public meeting on Monday to get an overview of a now-imminent public works project aimed at improving safety and flow at the notoriously dangerous intersection of Morton Street and Gallivan Boulevard.

Construction on the $3.5 million project that has been in the planning phase for several years is scheduled to start next Monday (May 20) and be completed by June of next year.

"At the end of the day, we have $3.5 million that is being spent by the state to make our most dangerous intersection safe," said state Rep. Daniel R. Cullinane, in addressing residents who had gathered for the briefing inside the Harbor Health Services facility on Morton Street.

Officials from MassDOT — the state agency that will oversee the project—gave a Powerpoint presentation, followed by questions and answers.

The project's planners goal was to improve safety at the hazardous crossing. The results: A new traffic signal controlling traffic at the site; exclusive left turn lanes and a protected turning phase along Route 203 at the West Selden intersection; rebuilt sidewalks; and new bike lanes between West Selden and Gallivan Boulevard.

Additionally, officials said, residents can expect to have MBTA bus stop schedules revised over (Continued on page 4)

The Vanguard Retrospective Exhibition, currently on display at the Dorchester Art Project, is what co-founder and Fields Corner resident Khanh "Aiden" Nguyen considers to be "the epicenter of queer Vietnamese art."

Nguyen, who was born in Vietnam but moved to Dorchester at the age of four, started "Vanguard," an underground art and literary zine, in 2014 along with Worcester-based photographer Thanh "Nu" Mai.

Since then, Nguyen has curated four editions of the magazine, which showcases artwork from LGTBQ Vietnamese artists based around the world. This coming Saturday night (May 18), the duo will premiere the fifth edition at the closing ceremony of the exhibition, which begins at 3 p.m. Nguyen told the Reporter the roots of the project grew from a simple search for kinship.

"It was pretty much about a journey to find community," he said. "I think living in Dorchester, and even later in New York, I was not able to connect with a lot

New report details how gentrification parallels shifts in city neighborhoods

By Jennifer Smith News Editor

While every one of the 147 cities and towns that make up Greater Boston has seen a spike in residents of color over the last generation, a new report uncovered certain population shifts within Boston neighborhoods that likely mirror the routes that gentrification has taken.

that gentrification has taken.

The report, "The Changing Faces of Greater Boston," examined demographic change in Massachusetts from 1990 to 2017. Its authors, a team composed of researchers from the Boston Foundation and UMass Boston, analyzed data from US Census outlays and the American Community Survey to fill in local character through interviews in villages like Fields Corner in Dorchester.

With respect to Boston, the report found the minority-majority city was 44 percent white in 2017, down from 59 percent white in 1990.

African Americans make up 23.1 percent of the city while Latinos have jumped from roughly 11 percent to 20 percent over the past two decades. Asian Americans rose from 5.2 percent to 9.4 percent in that same time frame while Native Americans remained at about 0.2 percent of the city's population.

Campbell seeks details on funds for violence prevention

By Jennifer Smith News Editor

As Boston Police districts in Dorchester and South Boston begin training with new body cameras, efforts to address spikes in violence and the resulting long-term trauma are ongoing at the city and local level.

City Council President Andrea Campbell is calling for a hearing on how violence prevention and intervention funds are being used in the city. Campbell, whose District 4 covers Dorchester and Mattapan and pieces of Jamaica Plain and Roslindale, filed a hearing order at last week's general council meeting.

"Obviously with the uptick in incidents of violence in my district, in the city as a whole, and in certain communities, one way to respond is to ensure that we have

In a 'reset," MBTA puts $10.1b price tag on its capital needs

By Chris Lisinski STATE HOUSE News Service

The cost to replace all outdated equipment and infrastructure across the MBTA system with modern alternatives is about $2.8 billion more than the previous state-of-goodrepair price estimate, officials said this week.

In 2015, the cost of addressing the entire maintenance backlog was put at some $7.3 billion. and officials have cited that figure since. But an assessment unveiled Monday, using new data about inventory and conditions collected over the past year raised the total modernization and replacement price tag to $10.1 billion.

The new figure is "fundamentally different," General Manager Steve Poftak said, because the data — which the MBTA had been required to collect following a Federal Transit Authority rule change — relied on different inventory counts and condition ratings than the past report.

Samantha Silverberg, the MBTA's senior director for capital planning. described the new estimate as a "fundamental reset" in how the authority thinks about its long-term needs, and MBTA officials during a briefing said that they do mates can be subjected to an "apples-to-apples" comparisons.

"This allows us to capture a much more realistic view of what the costs are to the MBTA to address capital needs in a real way and not in a much more imprecise like-for-like way, which was some of the thinking around 2015," Poftak said. "The current version is a much more accurate, precise and realistic assessment of the MBTA."

Officials based the new estimate on inventory data they gathered last year to submit to the FTA. Meeting the federal requirements helped produce a detailed list of every MBTA asset, and officials used that information and fresher cost estimates to project out all capital needs across the system.

The $10.1 billion figure is no longer just an estimate of what it will cost to bring the system into a state of good repair; it now refers to the cost of replacing or modernizing every currently outdated piece of equipment or infrastructure and also accounts for what Poftak described as "soft" expenses such as planning.

About $2.1 billion would be needed to replace more than 1,300 vehicles that have been in either passenger or nonpassenger service beyond their useful lifespans. Repairs needed at stations, facilities, and parking lots where conditions are insufficient make up nearly $4.8 billion of the total figure.

Despite the revised estimate of needs, officials said the MBTA is still on pace to bring the entire system to a state of good repair by 2032, the target date set by the Fiscal and Management Control Board. Silverberg and Poftak pointed to existing investments as important steps, saying the capital needs could have been significantly higher if not for about recent years.

Officials also said the estimate does not include projects that are currently scheduled or under way. If every modernization project in the current fiveyear capital investment plan — including station reconstructions and purchase of new buses — is completed on time, the needs assessment would drop to about $6.1 billion, they said.

Using new metrics also showed some improvements, officials said. Almost three-quarters of all passenger vehicles rated as outside a state of good repair in the 2015 assessment, but only one in three are in need of $3 billion in spending in replacement under the towhere the capital needs new definition used in the latest report.

The $10.1 billion total is a "point-in-time" estimate, Poftak said, and could change as placeholder assessments on commuter rail and station assets are finalized. But he believes the new framework will help MBTA officials better plan for how to meet the identified needs across the system, describing the challenges as "more apparent" but not "daunt-

"We know we are headed in the right direction, and we've got a plan to address the entire capital need," he said. "This just gives us more insight as are and where we should prioritize the spending."

FMCB Chairman Joseph Aiello praised the new strategy on Monday, saying the clearer accounting of needs would help the MBTA reach "much more dependable, reliable footing.'

Asked if the MBTA will need additional revenues to address the updated survey of needs, Poftak said the agency is fully funded through the draft five-year capital plan up to fiscal year 2024. Any future expansion projects, he said, would add complexity and warrant a long-term funding discussion.

Baker, Walsh to talk policy in tandem in DC

BY MATT MURPHY STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Four months after Boston Mayor Marty Walsh teased a "road trip" to Washington with the governor, he and Charlie Baker headed to DC this week to pressure Congress and the Trump administration to invest in housing, transportation, and the environment.

The trip comes during Infrastructure Week, a national event centered in DC that is intended to highlight the importance of rebuilding the country's infrastructure to promote job growth, security, and quality of life.

Baker and Walsh were scheduled to start their day Wednesday in Boston at a Green Ribbon Commission meeting with business and civic leaders in the city to discuss strategies for fighting climate change, before heading south for meetings in the afternoon with Transportation Secretary Elaine Chao, House Transportation Infrastructure Committee Chairman

Rep. Peter DeFazio, and the ranking Republican on that committee, Rep. Sam Graves of Missouri.

DeFazio, a Democrat, represents Eugene, Oregon, but he is originally from Baker's hometown of Needham and a graduate of Tufts University.

On Thursday, Walsh and Baker were to participate in a morning panel discussion hosted by Mike Allen of Axios about the opportunities and challenges surrounding transportation infrastructure and how cities and states are confronting the issue. That afternoon the duo will also meet with Delaware Sen. Tom Carper, a Democrat and ranking member of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, followed by a sitdown with the Massachusetts Congressional delegation.

The trip comes after House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Minority Leader Charles Shumer recently met with President Trump to revive discussions about possibly working together on a $2 trillion national infrastructure package.

According to the officials, lane closures will be necessary during parts of the project. But the restrictions will not be in place during the morning or evening rush hours (6 a.m. to 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. to 7 p.m.). One travel lane in each direction will be left open at all times, officials said, adding that work hours will mainly be confined to the period between 7 a.m. and 4 p.m. with some utility work done at night.

"I think this project needed to happen," said Linda Cabral, a Mattapan resident who attended the meeting. "Those in this community go through that intersection all the time and it's very hard to determine what incoming traffic is doing."

Sonya Huggins, who lives on Gallivan Boulevard, said that she and her neighbors have been asking for safety improvements to the perilous crossroads for two decades. "We'll be outside in our yards talking and we'll see the cars speeding and we cringe," said Huggins, who said she has personally seen accidents, and pedestrians being struck. She and other residents said they also want to see better enforcement of the speed limit along the stretch of road.

Exhibition at Dot Art Project called 'the epicenter of queer Vietnamese art'

That artistic community, which Nguyen formed through social media and trips to Vietnam, extends across the globe; the Fields Corner exhibition features artwork that has been shipped and collected from places as far away as California, Vietnam, and Italy. Nguyen explained that the zine, which he curates through a "very open" submission process, provides a free creative outlet for Vietnamese artists in particular, whose work is often censored by their country's government.

"From my perception of art in Vietnam, it's very inaccessible," he said. "People felt like they needed to have money to make art or they needed to have some sort of resource. And actually, in Vietnam, the law dictates that all published art goes through censorship... the zine culture kind of disrupts that."

An unrestricted, uncensored format lets artists publish bold or alternative styles of art beyond the sterilized versions permitted by which has been featured in each edition, often depicts scenes of nudity or sexuality. Mai mentioned one Vietnamese artist, Dat Phan, who always drew naked bodies but could never publish the work.

"This outlet allows them to be themselves, to be how they are and be free from censorship," explained Mai. "When I see the naked bodies in our zine, to me it means freedom."

The art featured in the exhibition is eclectic. On one wall, colorful manga-style sketches mingle with psychedelic watercolors and Pokemon stickers. In another corner, more traditional Vietnamese paintings hang before a black background. And in a separate room, patrons find an immersive multimedia experience in which they can sit inside a tent of mosquito netting and listen to a recording of spoken word poetry, music, and sound effects evocative of a Vietnamese living room. Nguyen says the varied nature of the art parallels a diverse diasporic experience.

"We wanted to show different sides of the Vietnamese community. How do we make this community make sense?" he said.

For decades, he explained, the war and the following diaspora forced artists to focus on survival rather than their art. As a result, museums around the world have showcased little work from any Vietnamese artists, let alone those who might be gay, lesbian, or queer. Therefore, he said, the outside world's perception of Vietnamese art is skewed towards a narrow, more traditional lens.

"A lot of the Vietnamese art you see or hear about is very traditional," said Mai. "This show has a feel of more contemporary art, and it's presented in an untraditional gallery setting."

As in many parts of the world, LGBTQ rights are limited but gradually expanding in Vietnam, where it was illegal for gay couples to live together until 2000. Stateside, many queer Vietnamese-Americans still struggle to be accepted by society and their families. As such, Vânguard's core purpose has remained simple: to provide a safe platform for LGTBQ artists.

"I think for Vânguard it's very much about just a very niche community," said Nguyen. "It's not about trying to take over the art world or take over the Vietnamese world; it's just about finding our own community and doing things as our own group."

This focus on art "made for us, by us" is at the heart of Vanguard; the zine's DIY process reflects its independent roots. But the location of the exhibition is also particularly special for Nguyen, who described the occasion as a "homecoming," as well as an opportunity to welcome other queer Vietnamese folk from Dorchester into the community he helped to create.

"I think growing up, I just never felt like I could be queer in Dorchester... with this exhibition, I'm bringing the community to them, to say yes, you can be queer and Vietnamese, and if you feel isolated, this is a space that was created for you, and there are people who also feel the same way, and that we are here to go through this together and celebrate together." The Vanguard Retrospective Exhibition closing and fifth zine edition release party will take place this Saturday, May 18, from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m. at the Dorchester Art Project at 1486 Dorchester Ave. The event is free and open to the public. Artwork and copies of zines will be available for purchase at the show and online at vanguardzine.

Historical Society wins state preservation award

By Daniel Sheehan Reporter Staff

The statewide non-profit organization Massachusetts Preservation presented the Dorchester Historical Society (DHS) with an award last week for its restoration of the William Clapp and Lemuel Clap houses, a process that began in 2015 and was completed last year.

The preserved William Clapp house, originally built in 1806, serves as the Society's headquarters on Boston Street, while the 17th century-era Lemuel Clap house serves as a house museum at the site. The Society's property is also home to a mid-19th century barn and a late-19th century carriage house, which contains a number of historic agricultural and carpentry tools and implements.

Last year, a team of Society members and volunteers finished a three-year-long restoration process that included restoring the exterior of each building, applying fresh coats of historically accurate paint, and repairing fences.

In a letter, Massachusetts Preservation $acknowledged\,the\,impact$ of the Dorchester Historical Society's preservation work: "Every year, thousands of people - from school children to senior citizens - take part in Society activities that bring to life the fascinating history of Dorchester, the larger development of Boston, and the story of the growth of agriculture and, in particular, fruit cultivation and hybridization, in the region."

DHS President Earl Taylor said that while the award is secondary to the work itself, he appreciated the gesture on behalf of Massachusetts Preservation.

"We definitely appreciate the award because it recognizes the whole action of planning, raising money, and overseeing the work, and it's nice to be recognized for that," said Taylor. "The goal of course was not to get an award but to get the project completed, but we're happy to be acknowledged for our work"

Outkast Electrical joins ranks of IBEW Local 103

Outkast Electrical Contractors, a 35-employee, Dorchester-based company, has joined IBEW Local 103. The partnership brings a well-respected, minority-owned business into the Dorchester-based union.

Founded and operated by cousins Paul Gray, president, and Kevin Scarlett, vice president, Outkast Electrical has been serving communities across Boston and beyond for 22 years.

"When my cousin and I started Outkast Electrical Contractors in 1996, it was just the two of us working on small residential projects," said Gray. "Today, we run a 35-person shop, and service some of the city's largest commercial and residential projects, because we get the job done right every time — end of story. We're thrilled to share our values and partner with Local 103. We see it as the logical next step in our company's evolution."

Outkast's addition of 35 new union members will represent a substantial organizing advancement for Local 103, which recently was honored at the national IBEW Membership Development Conference for its successful organizing efforts, which have earned the local the title of 'Fastest-growing IBEW Local Union'.

James Muldoon, who proudly lived for four decades of his adult life at the crest of Codman Hill Avenue, Dorchester, was born in Ballyshannon, Donegal, Ireland in 1890. Unmarried, and having become a US citizen in 1913, he registered for Selective Service on June 5, 1917; then, at the age of 28, enlisted in the US Army on April 26, 1918. He was dark in complexion, stood 5-foot-8, and had brown hair and brown eyes. As a civilian, he was a freight clerk.

In service to his adopted country, he was in uniform for only 14 months, but in that short time, judging from the battles, engagements, skirmishes and expeditions he participated in, he accumulated a lifetime of both experiences and memories, likely both good and bad.

As a soldier in the American Expeditionary Force, he was in the Meuse-Argonne offensive northwest of Verdun from Sept. 26, 2018, until Nov. 11, 1918, when the guns finally fell silent after four years of carnage. While his discharge papers do not confirm his military occupation, he disclosed years later to his nephew that he was a medic. Insignia on his doughboy helmet confirm his AEF status, assignment to the 4th Army Corps, and the 303 Field Hospital; the helmet also displays a red cross. After the armistice, he logged his progress across Germany on a map which has been passed down through his family. Family lore tells us that James was gassed during WWI. Indeed, upon his death in 1960, his wife was granted a disability pension.

James joined the Boston Police Department, and married Nora Cunningham on Oct.16, 1927, at St. Lawrence Church in Brookline and they set up their home at 370 Bowdoin St. in Fields Corner. By 1930, they were living at 32 Codman Hill Ave., where they stayed until his death. His service with the BPD, where he was known to fellow officers as "Hunky Dory Muldoon, a likely insight into his disposition, ended on March 1, 1948, when he was 58.

James and Nora, who had no children of their own, were gracious hosts in their two-family home, especially to rambunctious nieces and a nephew. He was a faithful husband and provider and a man of few words. He never owned a car, and with Nora, walked weekly to St. Gregory's Church on Dorchester Avenue. He instilled a love of the Red Sox culture to his visitors and listened faithfully to the play by play from Fenway Park. In his later years, James, with his shock of thick white hair, could often be seen walking down Washington Street in Codman Square or picking up the bus in front of the Girls' Latin school.

In October 1960, six months shy of his 70th birthday, James passed away of a heart attack, missing by a month the election of John F. Kennedy, the first Irish Catholic president of the United States.

Please Note: The Society's historic houses are open on the third Sunday of each month from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. James Blake House, 735 Columbia Road (1661); Lemuel Clap House, 199 Boston Street (1712 and remodeled 1765); William Clapp House, 195 Boston Street (1806).

Project D.E.E.P builds pride of community

For 23 years and counting, they have helped kids and teens get ready for entrance exams and offered extra help on tough homework assignments. They've connected students and parents with elite private school admissions officers. They've offered free summer camps to hard-working kids and teens who earn their spots by pitching in on community service projects.

The Dorchester Education and Enrichment Program— Project D.E.E.P. for short— does all of these things and more because it's part of its mission. In the process, the program has done even more: It has created a community of people who are devoted to one another and to their home neighborhood.

On Monday, the group gathered its latest crop of all-star students and tutors for its annual Recognition Night at Florian Hall, which has been a rite of spring since 1996, a way of saluting the young men and women—most of them in high school—who devote several hours of their week to helping younger kids from their neighborhood improve their schoolwork.

There are many ways to measure the success of such a program, of course. Project D.E.E.P. now counts more than 240 students in its annual exam prep program. Eighty-five percent of the kids enrolled see an increase in their test scores. A full 80 percent were successful in gaining entrance to one of the city's exam schools.

But, as Brendan McDonough, who founded the program in the mid-1990s, said on Monday night: "This program is all about community service. We have always said that we will judge ourselves by how many kids keep coming back as volunteers."

Over the years, Project D.E.E.P. has added several categories of awards to the program, each named for a local man or woman of distinction from our community

People like Dr. Tom Durant, whose name is attached to the annual Tutoring Award. This year's Durant Award went to Mairead Baker, who grew up using Project D.E.E.P.'s services herself, but has returned as a high school student to volunteer her own precious down time to work with her young neighbors. Mairead was hailed by D.E.E.P. direct Beth Connell as one of the most dynamic and engaging young people she has ever met.

On Monday, two high school seniors—Emily Foster and Joe Connolly— each received $6,000 academic scholarships, thanks to the generosity of the Tom & Patty Doar Foundation. Both Foster and Connolly have been active tutors in the D.E.E.P. program as high school students.

Monday's keynote speaker is another dynamic and successful Project D.E.E.P. almuna, Stephanie Maneikis, who attended Boston Latin School and then Harvard College. She has risen through the ranks of the Boston Red Sox organization over the last decade, and today serves as the senior director of Fan Services and Entertainment for the organization. Now a new mom, she and her husband Kevin recently bought a home on Pope's Hill, not far from where she grew up.

On Monday, she recalled her own experience as a young person sitting in the auditorium of the Murphy School, listing to Travis Roy tell his story to the Project D.E.E.P. class of that year. She traces her own success in part to the work ethic instilled in her by her proud parents— Charlie and Ellen— and cemented by her years engaged in the D.E.E.P. program.

"I feel a real sense of pride when I tell people where I'm from: Not just from Boston, but from Dorchester," Maneikis said.

Congrats to all of the board members, staff, volunteers and funders—most notably the Martin Richard Foundation—for making Project D.E.E.P. successful for more than two decades.

Every spring, we release our Capital Investment Plan, which funds the critical improvements to our infrastructure and facilities in Boston over a five-year period. It is a reflection of our priorities, and is guided by the voices of more than 15,000 residents who offered input for our citywide plan, Imagine Boston 2030. Our capital plan funds the essentials

By Mayor Martin J. Walsh

How we're investing in Dorchester of community life – our schools, streets, libraries, and parks, including climate and resilience projects. It's a commitment to all those who call Boston home and to our future generations.

Here in Dorchester, we're making investments across a wide range of projects, including parks and open space, streets and transportation, our schools'infrastructure, and our delivery of municipal services.

This year, we are investing in our open spaces and parks, because we know how important equitable and accessible access is in our neighborhoods. The $20 million that we are allocating to Dorchester's parks and open spaces will go to many different projects throughout our neighborhood:

Garvey Playground is being allocated $5 million for a park renovation that includes renovations to the play lot, along with field improvements, lighting, pathways, and court upgrades. Some $6.7 million will be used to renovate Harambee Park. Multipurpose soccer and lacrosse fields will be renovated, in addition to an extension to the main pedestrian pathway, improvements to lighting, and installation of new plantings. McConnell playground is receiving $3.8 million for a comprehensive renovation.

In addition, the refurbishment of the play lot at Doherty-Gibson playground will be allocated $1.1 million; $550,000 will be used for design park improvements to the Odom Serenity Garden; we have allocated $1 million to upgrade the play lots at Dorchester Park and Thetford Evans Playground. We are also investing $425,000 to design comprehensive park improvements to the Ryan Play Area and Mother's Rest at Four Corners. Finally, we are investing $3 million for artificial turf field replacements, including the turf at Ceylon Park.

We also care about the future of our city in the face of climate change. That is why $3.3 million in citywide climate resiliency planning efforts are being invested in Dorchester. This includes climate proofing of the Dorchester Bay and Moakley Park.

Likewise, we know the importance of investing in safe, reliable, and equitable street and transportation infrastructure. That's why we are investing the money needed to update roads and intersections throughout Dorchester, including $1.5 million for New England Avenue. This funding will be used to reconstruct the road, sidewalks, and lighting from Talbot Avenue to Norfolk Street. Another $500,000 will be used to reconfigure an existing pedestrian island on Massachusetts Avenue and create a bike lane from Columbia Road to Melnea Cass.

We are also investing in studying transportation, with $100,000 set aside to conduct a transportation study of the Bowdoin Street and Geneva Avenue area.

Additionally, we are investing in the future of Dorchester by investing in high-quality facilities and infrastructure for the neighborhood. We have allocated $24.7 million to design and construct a new Engine 17 fire station, along with $500,000 for building renovations at the Boston Fire Department Headquarters building. This renovation will include the installation of a new security gate. Finally, $3.2 million will be used to replace the air handler units at UP Academy.

In Boston, we know one of the best ways to invest in our city is by prioritizing investments in our students and their learning facilities. In our capital plan, $7.1 million has been allocated for the Henderson Inclusion Lower School to replace windows; $1 million will be used to replace the roof at the Everett School; and $1 million will be spent on a comprehensive education and space plan that supports the future use of the McCormack School building.

We also know how important libraries are for all our communities and this budget supports 21st century library services. In the coming years, Dorchester will be the home of three new library branches: at Adams Street, Uphams Corner, and Fields Corner. In addition, $226,000 will be used for an interior reconfiguration project and renovations to the Lower Mills Branch Library. And $100,000 has been allocated to conduct a facility assessment at the Codman Square Branch library.

Now that we've submitted Boston's budget, where do we go from here? First, to the City Council, where it will be reviewed and adjusted as necessary. After it has gone through that process and secured approval, it will go into effect, starting in July 2020 and running throughout the next 12 months. We hope you will continue to provide your valuable input on what we as a city can do to raise up your community. If you'd like to learn more about the Capital Investment Plan and how this budget was created, go to budget.boston.gov.

Criticism of Israel and anti-Semitism: To begin, we should define the terms

By Roy Lincoln Karp Reporter Contributor

We live in Orwellian times. Up is down, war is peace, and a report declaring that investigators could not exonerate the President for obstruction of justice becomes a rally cry of "NO OBSTRUCTION!" by that president. In political essays and novels like "1984," George Orwell implored us to think critically about the manipulation of language for political ends. He also coined the term "double speak," the repeated use of a word to mean its exact opposite, thus rendering the word meaningless.

Here in Massachusetts, two local organizations with Orwellian names—Charles Jacobs's Americans for Peace and Tolerance and Karen Hurvitz's Education without Indoctrination—have been using the courts to purge school curricula of anything they deem insufficiently pro-Israel. That they call their efforts to suppress dissenting viewpoints a fight against indoctrination is a good example of double speak.

These two groups have sued the Newton Public Schools over what they allege is an anti-Semitic curriculum. The problem is that their overly broad definition of anti-Semitism includes any criticism of Israeli policies toward Palestinians. This is absurd on its face as many Jews are themselves highly critical of these policies and form an important part of the Palestinian solidarity movement. These efforts not only have a chilling effect on protected speech, but they also create confusion about what anti-Semitism actually is.

Another example is a lawsuit recently filed by Hurwitz against UMass Amherst on behalf of three anonymous Jewish students. The suit sought to compel the university to cancel a panel discussion titled "Not Backing Down: Israel, Free Speech, and the Battle for Palestinian Human Rights." The event was organized by the Media Education Foundation, a non-profit film company founded by Sut Jhally, a professor of communications at UMass Amherst. It was co-sponsored by the campus chapter of Students for Justice in Palestine and Western Massachusetts Jewish Voice for Peace, both of which intervened as defendants in the case.

According to Jhally, the goal of the event was "to respond to attacks on recent attacks on US Rep. Ilhan Omar of Minnesota and other progressives who have spoken out against Israel's 50-year military occupation of Palestinian land and criticized pro-Israel pressure groups for conflating legitimate criticism of Israeli government policies with 'anti-Semitism."

The panel featured Linda Sarsour, a Palestinian-American activist and co-chair of the Women's March; Marc Lamont Hill, a professor who lost his job at CNN after making pro-Palestinian remarks; and David Zirin, a writer who covers the politics of sports for The Nation; and rock musician Roger Waters of Pink Floyd fame. The moderator was journalist and historian Vijay Prashad.

Hurwitz's complaint alleged the event constituted racial discrimination against Jewish students and would violate US Department of Education guidelines prohibiting anti-Semitism. This is part of a broader effort, led by Kenneth Marcus, a Trump-appointed Undersecretary of Education, to use an overly broad definition of anti-Semitism to suppress pro-Palestinian speech and activism on college campuses across the country.

As any first-year law student could have predicted, the lawsuit went nowhere. The court denied the students' request for an injunction and the event went ahead as planned on May 4. In his ruling, Suffolk Superior Court Judge Robert Ullmann declined to impose a "prior restraint" on protected speech, which courts have long held to be repugnant to the First Amendment. He did not address the lawsuit's underlying premise that criticism of Israel is inherently anti-Semitic, nor did he need to.

But it is a premise we should be ever vigilant in debunking. Anti-Semitism presents a real threat to Jewish communities and should be taken seriously. So should the political indoctrination of students. That is precisely why we must think critically about the way language is used, to be ever watchful for Orwellian double speak. This is imperative if words like "peace" and "tolerance" are to retain their original meaning and their true aims achieved.

New report details how gentrification parallels shifts in city neighborhoods

Some census tracts along that route have seen non-white populations drop by upwards of 10 percent. The Roxbury area just southeast of Northeastern University and Wentworth Institute of Technology lost 32.1 percentage points in non-white residents in 2017.

As of two years ago, that swing, for the most part, had not made significant inroads into Dorchester. Population estimates for most of Dorchester and Mattapan show all but four census tracts were still majority non-white in 2017, with several tracts abutting Franklin Park's eastern edge more than 95 percent non-white and mostly black and Hispanic.

These were the tracts that showed the smallest gains or slight decreases in non-white residents over the 28year period with a rise and fall of less than 2 percent, according to the report.

Along the Red Line corridor from JFK/ UMass through to Ashmont and down the Mattapan Trolley route, almost every tract showed gains in non-white residents by upwards of 12.7 percent, rising as high as 46.5 percent in the census tract centered off Freeport Street and bounded by Clam Point and Fields Corner.

The area of Neponset around Gallivan Boulevard comprised only 10 percent non-white residents in 2017, but even that 4,000 or so resident tract was up about 6.8 percent in non-white populations from 1990, with small gains in the number of black, Asian, and Hispanic residents in an area that was once almost 97 percent white.

Two zones that have seen swings in racial makeup, or where residents feel on the cusp of displacement, are highlighted in the report. One is the city of Quincy and the other is Fields Corner.

More than 90 percent of the region's net population growth since 1990 has come from new immigrants, the report shows. More than two-thirds of Asian Americans in Greater Boston were foreignborn as of 2017, and the black foreign-born share jumped from 21 to 38 percent since 1990.

Most of the Vietnamese residents of Fields Corner - their country of orgin accounts for about 75 percent of Dorchester's Asian-American population - began arriving in 1975 as refugees of the Vietnam War. Their numbers grew slowly over the next decade, with many early arrivals struggling with language adjustment, low income levels, and a lack of social supports, the report notes.

Now Asian Americans and white residents make up roughly equal portions of the local population, about a third in the dominant Fields Corner census tracts where Vietnamese cultural institutions have become staples of the neighborhood.

"Essential to the integration process was an increase in self-advocacy and civic involvement on the part of Vietnamese Americans," the report said. It highlights the founding of Vietnamese

American Initiative for Development(VietAID) community development organization in 1994 as "a particularly important milestone for the Vietnamese community in Dorchester."

That community still has disproportionately low income and educational attainment levels compared with the Greater Boston average, Boston Indicators notes. "English proficiency is also a challenge, particularly for Vietnamese American seniors in Boston of whom 85.1 percent spoke English "not well" or "not at all" as of 2015.

In this context, development pressures feel like an incursion on a cultural center, according to the report, which noted that "for many Vietnamese Americans, particularly new immigrants and the elderly who are less proficient in English, living in an ethnic enclave is more than just a comfort; it is crucial to accessing needed services."

The Red Line corridor stretches through a still underdeveloped swatch of the neighborhood and the city is reviewing draft recommendations now for a planning area that stretches roughly between the Fields Corner and Savin Hill Tstations along Dorchester Avenue. Home prices in the district where Fields Corner is located jumped by 76 percent in the last five years, while Boston as a whole saw a rise of 51 percent.

the planning study sparked the development of Dorchester Not For Sale, a diverse affordable housing and anti-gentrification group. Carolyn Chou, program director at the Asian American Resource Workshop, told the report's authors that Dorchester residents are responding to increased housing pressures by decamping to areas like Quincy, Randolph, Brockton, and Weymouth.

"The Asian American community has grown and become well established in Dorchester alongside other racial groups," the report said. "The future sustainability and well-being of this community, like that of other communities of color in Boston, however, remain uncertain."

grants, through mechanisms like the Shannon Grant and the Safe and Successful Youth Initiative (SSYI), dedicated to violence prevention and intervention programs. But she feels there is no clear way to track or assess the effectiveness of those funds.

The city needs clear objectives for the money, Campbell said. That aside, a more open process for deciding how funds are awarded and what metrics programs should use to determine a successful outcome.

"I'm not sure that there is a common understanding or practice within the city of Boston," Campbell said. "The BPD grant division does some incredible work, but they're often frankly under-resourced and overworked. So, the question is of all the departments that have their hands on violence prevention and intervention monies, are we all on the same page with respect to transparency and accountability?"

She was joined in her hearing order by the rest of the council. Campbell's team is making a list of stakeholders and officials they will ask to testify at the hearing, which does not yet have a set date.

Another measure the Mattapan resident and councillor has pushed – the body camera rollout – is seeing some movement. Some officers in South Boston and Dorchester have started the training process for using body cameras on the job, which is expected to enter normal use later in the spring.

Officers in the C-6 and C-11 districts and gang unit received phones that work with the body cameras in April, police said. Training for those officers began the week of May 6 and is expected to take a few weeks.

"Boston is a model city in our nation for having strong police-community relations, and our goal is to continue building trust and positive relationships between law enforcement officers and community members," Mayor Martin Walsh said in a statement. "We will continue to move forward in implementing a body camera program here in Boston as a way to support the incredible progress we have made in community policing."

The city did not provide details on how the police districts were chosen. A year-long body camera pilot program concluded in late 2017, after 100 randomized officers in districts B-2 in Roxbury, B-3 in Mattapan and Dorchester, D-4 in the South End, 14 in Brighton, 18 in Hyde Park, and members of the Youth Violence Strike Force were matched up to compare the types of interactions of camerawearing officers against a control group without Afull report released in late 2018 showed small reductions in citizen complaints and use of force complaints. Walsh said at the time that the city would move into a "phased in" approach. The first phase appears to have begun in South Boston and Dorchester.

"I haven't been looped in of late," Campbell said. "So, we filed a hearing order last year and then re-filed it, asking some specific questions about now that we have agreed to do a full implementation, how are we going to roll that out? What would those phases look like? Which districts will be equipped with body cameras in the first phase, the second, and the third? What metrics and criteria are we using for that roll-out to decide which districts get the cameras? How will the $2 million we invested in the FY19 budgets be used? We have yet to have the hearing and we're waiting on the administration."

Shekia Scott — cofounder of the Boston Police Camera Action Team — told WBUR that gradual implementation feels unnecessary because the program has already been tested. She is watching the roll-out and policy around the camera implementation, she said.

"The camera helps us take a look inside of our policing system: Does it work? What do those daily interactions look like? And what can we do to improve that?" she told WBUR.

Arising from listening sessions with survivors groups and anti-violence advocates like Tina Chery with the Louis D. Brown Peace Institute, Campbell said a first Constructing Peaceful Communities workshop is planned for this Friday (May 17). It will focus on addressing incidents of violence from "prevention, intervention, enforcement, and re-entry" standpoints through dedicated teams.

The workshop will run from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. at the Mattapan
Teen Center on Hazelton

"It's a space that we will frequently create for our residents to come together to talk about how they're feeling with respect to these incidents of violence," Campbell said, "but then to roll up our sleeves as a community and say, 'Okay, now what are we going to do about it?"

It looks like Chinatown's high school has finally found itself a new home

By Max Larkin WBUR REPORTER

After a decades-long search, the Josiah Quincy Upper School seems to have finally found a permanent site in Boston's Chinatown neighborhood.

In an op-ed in Sampan, Boston's bilingual Chinese-English newspaper, Mayor Marty Walsh announced last week that congregants at the Boston Chinese Evangelical Church have agreed to sell their property at 249 Harrison Ave. to the city as a site for the new school.

City officials said the church accepted an offer of $9.5 million for the property. Demolition is slated to begin in 2021. with hopes that the new school would open to students in the fall of 2023.

The Josiah Quincy Upper School, home to 549 students from grade 6 to 12, has long outgrown its beginnings as a pilot program and its present-day facilities. For years, JQUS was spread out across three buildings, including the former Lincoln School (built in 1911), an office building, and two modular buildings for the middle grades. Currently, the school relies on the Chinatown YMCA for physical edu-

The school's co-headmaster Richard Chang said those modular buildings especially have overstayed their welcome. Built to last for two or three years in 2000, he said they now see "regular leakage of rain and snow."

JQUS's enrollment is nearly half Asian, the highest proportion among BPS high schools. And since 2010, JQUS has been one of two BPS schools to offer challenging, researchfocused programming through the International Baccalaureate program.

Chang touts the school's national reputation for rigor. In 2016, the Washington Post named JQUS one of the 500 most challenging high schools in America for its college-level curriculum. But Chang said JQUS will need laboratory space, a library, and a gym to remain an IB school for the foreseeable future — making the move to a new school an almostexistential issue.

And it hasn't happened yet. Chang, who first came to the school 16 years ago, said, "We've been left at the altar several times."

In the early 2000s, they had hopes of occupying the former Don Bosco high school, but that didn't pan out. Then, shortly after Walsh took office in 2014, the Massachusetts School Building Authority rescinded its support for a planned building over Interstate 93 that would be shared by JQUS and the Boston Arts Academy, citing a host of logistical and architectural concerns.

Then in 2016, the city announced its intention to move JQUS to the present-day site of the McKinley South End Academy, which serves students who didn't thrive in larger schools. After community resistance, the city abandoned that plan as

So this week, city officials greeted the news that the church was willing to sell as something like a godsend. "It's really, really exciting," said Pat Brophy, Mayor Walsh's chief of operations. Brophy, who described himself as a 25-year veteran of public construction, said the JQUS project has long been hamstrung by the shortage of available plots in and around Chinatown. "It was really a supply-and-demand thing," he said. Brophy said the process that began this week was a function of serendipity; the church is "looking at potentially building a new church on the other side of the Pike. And the timing of that, combined with the timing of our request to purchase, I think it just worked out."

He described the $9.5 million price tag as 'a lot of money ... but a good investment in Boston's children [at] a fair price."

Under the deal, Brophy said, the church will continue to occupy its building through 2021, and use school-building space temporarily to continue its work as the Harrison Avenue building is demolished. (That means this move won't open up considerable 'swing space' as other schools are moved or reconfigured elsewhere in the city as part of the ongoing BuildBPS initiative.)

Church leaders couldn't be reached for comment, but city officials said congregants approved the sale last week by a 90 percent

Chang, the headmaster, agreed that the church site is "very centrally located" and in a position to serve all the inhabitants, new and old, of Boston's downtown area. But given the troubled history of development — and since the church hasn't started its own new building yet — he's still in wait-and-see mode.

"I'm not inclined to anticipate anything as a foregone conclusion," he said.

But Brophy suggested this one isn't like those other attempts. He said he expects the city's public-facilities commission to authorize the sale this week. Then, he said, "it's just a matter of everyone signing on the dotted line.'

METCO moving to online lottery for enrollments in the program New deal to phase in over two years

An online lottery system will replace the current "first-come, first-served" enrollment protocol for the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity (METCO) program. The plan, which was approved on April 30 by the state's Education Department, will modernize the paper-based system over the next two years.

The METCO program, founded in 1966, places children from Boston into racially isolated schools in nearby suburbs to increase diversity. Program officials currently work with 3,300 students annually who are enrolled in 190 public schools in 33 suburban school districts.

More than 15,000 students seek one of the approximately 300 available seats per year and many families put their children's names on the METCO wait list at birth.

"Families have told us how stressful the current system is," said METCO CEO Milly Arbaje-Thomas. "The METCO community is ready and eager to support our historic legacy with 21st-century operations."

You can review the complete METCO revised application process at metcoinc.org/newapplication-system.
