Development welcome, Port Norfolkers say, but traffic's the big hurdle

By Jennifer Smith REPORTER STAFF

A dense new development comprising housing, a 25-room hotel, retail, parking, a swath of green space, and a refurbished marina could be coming to the Marine-Max/Russo Marine site in Port Norfolk, local residents were told at a workshop last Saturday.

RODE Architects, in concert with South Boston-based City Point Capital, will be developing the 7.6-acre parcel of prime waterfront land and updating the existing marina. The architects pitched neighbors on the concept and solicited feedback from the gathering at the

Advocates see progress in Dot beach quality: Tenean still lags

By ROWAN WALRATH REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

A new report from non-profit organization Save the Harbor/Save the Bay indicates that some progress is being made to improve water quality at Dorchester's three beaches as public agencies work to repair pipes and other infrastructure that can lead to pollution. The report is based on data collected during the 2016 beach season from 15 public beaches from Nahant to Quincy.

Viewed over a six-year period, Dorchester's Tenean Beach remained at the bottom of the list, with an average score of 81 percent in primary beach safety. Malibu Beach was slightly better, with an 89 percent average and Savin Hill posted a 94 percent average. In 2016, however, the beaches scored 92 percent, 97 percent, and 100 percent, respectively— an improvement that experts say was driven higher by last year's lower-than-normal rainfall.

"It's always interesting to look at annual numbers," said Bruce Berman of Save the Harbor/Save the Bay. "But it's more important to look at the last few years, in this case the last six years. It gives you a more complete picture."

Berman said that while Dorchester's beaches have traditionally tested poorly, there have been recent improvements, likely the result of infrastructural repairs.

'Net-zero' condos to occupy lot near Codman Square

By Jonathan Innocent REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

A new, eight-unit condominium building with ground-level retail space is rising from what was formerly an unsightly, abandoned gas station lot near Codman Square. New property owners and Kristine and Tom Piatt of Piatt Associates say their vision for the project— dubbed "West on Washington"— was

"to create a building for and a full washer and the next 100 years."

The Piatts acquired the property at 717-719 Washington St. situated at the corner of Washington Street and Dunbar Avenue — in a competitive bid process conducted by the City of Boston. Once finished, the three-story building will house eight condo units on the upper two floors, each with three bedrooms, two baths, dryer set.

Tom Piatt, who coowns the architectural firm Piatt Associates with his brother James, says he expects that the asking price will be reasonable for working

"We are targeting it for families, for couples who work in the city with kids, as an option for them," said Piatt. (Continued on page 8)

Codman Square minister among busted 'johns'

A minister at a Dorchester church was one of nine men arrested in an anti-prostitution sting operation conducted by Boston Police last Wednesday. The men allegedly agreed to pay $150 for sex with person they contacted through an online ad. Hull resident Archie Foxworth, 68, who has been pastor of Grace Church of All Nations Church in Codman Square for 35 years, was among those arraigned at Boston Municipal Court for seeking sex for a fee.

"Human trafficking exists because sex buyers make it profitable," Suffolk County District Attorney Dan Conley said. "Part of our strategy is making clear that there are personal, social, and legal consequences for that behavior."

Conley's office say more BPD sting operations are in the works. Foxworth pleaded with his congregation for forgiveness at services on Sunday, according to a report by the Boston Globe.

Bond admits she lied to cover up murder

The mother of a 2-yearold girl whose body washed up on a Boston beach in 2015 has testified she lied about her daughter's whereabouts to others and continued to live with the boyfriend weeks after she says he killed the child.

Rachelle Bond testified Monday in the firstdegree murder trial of Michael McCarthy, her former boyfriend. It was her second day on the witness stand.

The 41-year-old Bond testified last week that she saw the 37-year-old McCarthy fatally punch her daughter, Bella Bond, in the stomach sometime in June 2015 after she wouldn't go to bed. Bond also testified McCarthy threatened to kill her if she ever told anyone about the assault.

McCarthy's lawyer argues Bond killed the girl, who was initially dubbed "Baby Doe" after a composite image of her likeness was shared by millions on social media as authorities tried to identify her.

On Monday, Bond acknowledged she was asked - and lied - onmultiple occasions about her daughter, including from the child's biological father and from a lawyer who helped her in an eviction case.

She also testified that she and McCarthy used heroin heavily following her daughter's death and that she lied, partly to keep the public benefits that helped fuel their addiction.

Bond is testifying under a plea deal with prosecutors. She previously pleaded guilty to being an accessory after the fact for helping dispose of her daughter's body. The trial opened May 30. (AP)

Franklin Field center re-named for Juanda Drumgold

By Jonathan Innocent Reporter Correspondent

Mayor Martin J. Walsh, Boston Housing Authority Administrator Bill McGonagle, and the Franklin Field community honored the late Juanda Drumgold, a longtime resident in the public housing development at a Tuesday ceremony. The Franklin Field Senior Center on Ames Street was re-named in memory of Drumgold, who died in October 2016.

"Ms. Drumgold was a true voice and tireless advocate for the residents of Franklin Field and for the greater Dorchester area," said Mayor Walsh in remarks to a crowd that included members of her family. "Her advocacy and commitment to children, families and seniors will be treasured and missed, and this dedication speaks to her life and her voice."

Her son, Darryl Drumgold, spoke on behalf of her family and thanked the city officials and Franklin Field community members for coming together to recognize and celebrate his mother's life work, stating that, "She dedicated her life to community and family, and it's always been her passion."

ing in the Franklin Field community, Drumgold would come to the center once a week to exercise and on other occasions to organize events and initiatives for the neighborhood. Franklin Field residents and tenant task force members also knitted a quilt in her honor that was dedicated to the Center.

The quilt, which now hangs on the wall of the Center, is another example of how much she is appreciated and how her love and efforts for this community was recognized and reciprocated. "Mrs. Drumgold was a true friend; a kind soul who dedicated her life to this development and to the residents who call Franklin Field home," said Bill McGonagle, BHA Administrator. "She was a pillar of this community, and we count it an honor to celebrate her in this fashion."

Originally from Brockton, Drumgold initially moved to the South End neighborhood of Boston where she and her sister Patricia Drumgold worked to raise their family, before moving and settling into the Franklin Field Public Housing Development. She worked with the City's Elderly Commission, took an active role in Age-Friendly Boston, and appeared on the television show Seniors Count. She also volunteered through Grandparents Raising Grandchildren and Boston University Alzheimer's Disease Community Action Council.

McGonagle added, "We never left a community meeting without a few new assignments from Ms. Drumgold."

Her son Darryl added: "I shared my mother with an entire community and an entire city. That's just the kind of person that she is; an incredible woman. My friends were her kids, and we all grew up together. There's not one person in my life that I've grown up with or been around that she hasn't touched or had an influence on."

Four now certified for mayor's ballot

New names have joined the list of verified candidates for this year's municipal elections. Robert Cappucci, of East Boston, has been approved for a spot on the ballot for mayor, joining City Councillor Tito Jackson and East Boston resident Joseph Wiley in challenging incumbent Mayor Martin Walsh.

A preliminary election will take place on Sept. 26 for the mayor's seat, as well as for city councillor in districts one, two, seven, and nine.

Eight candidates are vying for the at-large city council seat, just shy of the number needed for a preliminary election in September. City Councillors Annissa Essaibi-George, Michael Flaherty, Ayanna Pressley, and Michelle Wu will face candidates Althea Garrison and William King of Dorchester, Pat Payaso of Roxbury, and Domingos DaRosa of Hyde Park.

In District Seven, there are now 13 candidates seeking the seat that will be vacated by Councillor Jackson. Former state Rep. Carlos Henriquez joined the ballot this week.

Markey, at a town hall session in Boston, challenges Trump agenda

REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

Climate change, health care, and the future of the Democratic Party were on US Sen. Edward J. Markey's mind when he held a town hall meeting at the downtown Paramount Theatre last Thursday. Some 200 people packed in to converse with the senator on those issues and more.

US Rep. Michael Capuano, who represents the Bay State's seventh congressional district, which includes most of the Boston and its surrounding communities, introduced Markey to the gathering, saying, "We have some interesting times, and I'm being particularly kind with that phrase.'

Capuano was joined on the stage by Mayor Martin Walsh, who echoed his sentiments and added that Boston's 'values are under attack." In Boston, the mayor said, the effects of immigration policy, environmental policy, and reductions in funding for medical research are hitting especially

As to climate change, President Trump had announced America's withdrawal from the landmark Paris accord that morning, and Markey was quick to react when he took the stage: "Today was a low point in American history," he said to murmurs of agreement. "Donald Trump decided he was going to remove the US from the Paris climate agreement. ... Today, Donald Trump said that the United States couldn't do it. That it was too hard."

Sen. Edward J. Markey

Calling Trump "JFK in reverse," Markey contrasted the two presidents on what would have been John F. Kennedy's 100th birthday. He invoked Kennedy's 1962 speech in which he said the US would land a man on the moon by the end of the 1960s "and do the other things, not because they are easy, but because they are hard.... "When the world looked at the United States to be a technological leader, [Trump] said, 'It's too hard. We only want to do things that are easy,' Markey told the crowd.

Trump has effectively ceded the opportunity to advance clean energy to other countries, Markey said. In Massachusetts alone, he noted, there are almost 100,000 jobs in the clean energy sector. By contrast, there are around 77,000 jobs in coal mining across the country today, according

In addition to energy, Markey also took up health care in his opening remarks. Although Trump held a listening session on opioids and drug abuse in March, and US Attorney General Jeff Sessions spoke at the DEA360 Heroin and Opioid Response Summit last month, Markey said that killing the Affordable Care Act—and the addiction treatment programs it funds— will make those events useless.

"A vision without funding is a hallucination," the senator said.

Several of the participants shared Markey's concerns about health care. One Brookline resident asked him about cultivating personal relationships with Republicans to persuade them to vote against the GOP-driven American Health Care Act. Others advocated for a singlepayer health care policy: Stephanie Nakajima, director of communications for advocacy group Healthcare-NOW, asked if Markey would cosponsor the single-payer health care bill that US Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) said he would push.

Markey agreed that a single-payer health care system should be the "long-term goal," but added that he and his colleagues are "practical Bostonian politicians" and would prioritize it later. "I'll read Bernie's bill," he said. "All of our efforts right now should be focused on defeating the American Health Care Act."

Ashley Tartarilla, an activist with Indivisible Somerville, was concerned about the current Justice Department. She asked Markey how he planned to fight Sessions's criminal justice reforms. "We need to apologize to an entire generation of young black men," Markey answered in sharing Tartarilla's opposition to Sessions' policies. "The mandatory minimums were a mistake. The three strikes, you're out was a mistake."

Some attendees expressed skepticism about the Democratic Party's future. One asked what kind of "alternative vision" it could provide, and another asked why the party seemed to be failing, having lost control of many governorships and state legislatures in November.

Markey said in response that Democrats had taken millions of voters for granted at a national level. "Over time, we forgot how to win," Markey said. "We didn't organize. Massachusetts never forgot you want to get inside our internal meetings, that's all we talk about. What went wrong?"

Markey also pointed to the Republicans' technological advantage, saving, "Their analytics were light-years ahead of ours." He mentioned Cambridge Analytica, a data mining and analysis company that is being probed in Congress for potential interference in the last presidential election.

Right now, Markey seems more keen on organizing Democrats than on ousting Trump from office, even as talk of impeachment begins to rise. "What you've got to say to yourself, every day, is 'Okay, only three years and 39 weeks to go," Markey said. "It takes time. You have to have energy. ... You have to have faith in the American people."

But not everyone is willing to wait for nearly four years. Ronel Remy, a Haitian immigrant living in Brockton, told Markey that climate change hurts his island country more than nearly anywhere in the world.

After the 2012 earthquake in Haiti, the Obama administration how to organize. ... If granted temporary protected status to about 58,000 immigrants, allowing them to stay and work in the United States while their homeland recovered. Progress on the recovery was brought to a screeching halt last fall when Hurricane Matthew killed over 1,000 people. A cholera epidemic, spurred by both events, has sickened 800,000 people and killed over 9,000 Haitians, according to The Washington Post.

Homeland Security Secretary John F. Kelly last week lengthened the time for the protected status, which was slated to end in July, by six months. But many Haitians, including Remy, fear that the island will still not be safe to return

As Remy spoke, state Sen. Linda Dorcena Forrv. a Haitian-American. entered the theatre. She joined Markey onstage, where she said that he has advocated for Haiti for a long time and that the two of them had visited Haiti together last October on the day after Hurricane Matthew made landfall. "He is doing incredible work,' Dorcena Forry said. "I'm just happy to be here."

Baker, Essaibi-George seek hearing on 'supervised injection sites'

By Colin A. Young STATE HOUSE News Service

Two Boston city councillors from Dorchester are calling for a hearing on the potential impacts of supervised injection sites in the city as the controversial idea gains mainstream attention in Massachusetts.

Councillors Annissa Essaibi-George and Frank Baker have requested that the City Council hold a hearing to consider what such sites — places where addicts can inject drugs they obtain elsewhere while under supervision -would mean for public health and public safety in Boston.

"Boston needs to be front and center in the conversation about safe injection sites," Essaibi-George, an at-large councillor, said in a statement. "Research shows that there are definitely some positive outcomes for facilities like this, especially in reducing overdose deaths."

The American Journal of Public Health said supervised injection facilities are "a place supervised by licensed health personnel where (people) inject drugs they obtain elsewhere. Facility staff do not directly assist in injection, but provide sterile injection supplies, answer questions on vein care and safer injection methods, administer first aid, and monitor for overdose.'

There are about 100 supervised injection sites in nine countries, including Switzerland, Germany, the Netherlands, Spain, Australia and Canada, according to the Drug Policy Alliance.

Though there are no supervised injection sites in America, the idea has gained mainstream attention as the number of people dying from drug overdoses grows and the public health ramifications of rampant addiction spread. In April, the Massachusetts Medical Society began to lobby state and federal lawmakers to pilot a firstin-the-nation state-run safe injection site program in Massachusetts and last month the Massachusetts Senate adopted an amendment directing the Department of Public Health to study supervised injection sites.

On WGBH Tuesday, Senate President Stanley Rosenberg said injection sites have been successful in other countries."People need to get their head around it," he said. "I'm open-minded but I'm skeptical at this point."

The request for a hearing is scheduled to be considered Wednesday by the City Council.

beaches," he said. "That said, we still have more work to do, especially at Tenean."

From Memorial Day to Labor Day, beach water is tested for the bacteria Enterococcus. Testers take a small water sample from the beach, place it in a Petri dish, and count the number of Enterococcus colonies that grow over a 24-hour period. In Dorchester, Savin Hill Beach is tested weekly, while Malibu and Tenean are tested daily. Although the standard is different for daily and weekly testing, all beaches are measured on a pass-fail basis, Berman said.

Savin Hill Beach is nearly always "terrific," he said, while Malibu is mid-range and more negatively affected by rain. Tenean consistently has issues.

John Sullivan, chief engineer at the Boston Water and Sewer Commission (BWSC), said that Savin Hill and Malibu are largely clean because there is little risk of sewage contamination.

"At Savin Hill Beach, there is an emergency overflow that can be dumped there," he said, "but it's only during the hurricane-type eventsand you shouldn't be swimming during a hurricane. We don't have any sewer pipes [at Malibu]," he noted, saying that the beach could be contaminated by a storm drain near the Savin Hill Yacht Club, although illicit connections in that area have been addressed already.

While Tenean remains at the bottom of the list in terms of water safety, it has seen recent improvements. The efforts of Save the Harbor/Save the Bay, in partnership with BWSC and the Massachusetts Water

> Sullivan said that recent repairs show a correlation with a reduction in contamination at Tenean. In May 2016, BWSC spent around $77,000 repairing a sewer with a leaky joint near Pine Nut Creek.

"We noticed that right after that, the amount of contamination on the beach seemed to drop," Sullivan said. "Of course, it didn't rain that much.'

Last year, Massachusetts was in the midst of the worst drought the state had seen in more than a decade. Rain is a chief factor in water quality: the more rainfall, the more likely runoff is to enter beach water and increase contamination levels.

"You cannot assume anything," Sullivan said. "You've got to check it, and check it, and check it."

Since 2011, Sullivan said his team has fixed 22 illicit connections between the sewer and the drain system near Victory Road, just north of Tenean Beach. Sullivan estimates that they have removed around 1,700 gallons of sewage that was entering storm drains daily. He also cited a broken sewer on Charles Street near Fields Corner, calling it a "significant leak' whose fix he believes also contributed to a "substantial reduction in the amount of pollution" at Tenean.

Sullivan said the nature of determining water contaminant sources is imprecise. Because the water and sewer system's infrastructure is completely underground, it is difficult to know when something breaks; "sometimes," he said, "it just decides to."

MWRA spokeswoman Ria Convery applauded Sullivan and Berman's

"It's been a great partnership," she said. 'They've been really helpful with their criticisms and with their support."

State Rep. Dan Hunt, who represents the 13th Suffolk District, which includes most of Dorchester, has long advocated for local infrastructure improvements. Prior to his election in 2014, Hunt worked for the state's Department of Conservation and Recreation. In office, he has pushed for a project to improve drainage and elevations on William T. Morrissey Boulevard between the John J. Beades drawbridge and UMass Boston.

"All of those street drains are picking up all the water and all the bird droppings and everything else and draining them all to the same spot," Hunt said.
"Instead of draining directly, can we get a catch basin that holds the water for a few days so that it can be treated?"

Hunt pointed out that the current system of testing beach water does not necessarily reflect its safety, since warnings about water quality are put out the day after samples are collected.

"The days that you get high bacteria counts there, it doesn't really reflect the actual situation, and it's actually much better than the numbers say as far as swimability goes," Hunt said. "If you had an instant test, which doesn't exist, then it would be fine to swim."

Last Saturday, Save the Harbor/Save the Bay awarded more than $55,000 in Better Beaches Program Grants to support free events and activities on regional beaches. According to a statement from the organization, Shores received $2,000 for the Dorchester Beach Festival, and the Port Norfolk Civic Association received $2,500 for Tenean Beach Day.

Berman and his colleagues at Save the Harbor/Save the Bay are eager to help communities with lowscoring beaches this summer. He said the organization has scheduled two cleaning days the Friends of Savin Hill at Victory Park—one in June and one in the fall— as they try to determine whether dog waste could play a significant factor in pollution at Tenean Beach.

"It's a question of will, and I think we have the will," Berman said. "And then it's a question of whether we have the resources."

For his part, Sullivan, plans to monitor water quality, find broken connections, and resolve any issues are simply a matter of course.

"We're going to be watchingthatextremely closely, and if we see any uptick, we're going to be back in your pipes," he said. "We're the only people in the world that are happy to find the problem and want to spend the money to

House tour in Ashmont area set for Sunday

Continuing the long tradition of Dorchester housetoursthatitrevived last year in the Ashmont Hill neighborhood, the Dorchester Historical Society presents the 2017 Dorchester House Tour on Sunday, June 11, from 12 noon to 5 p.m.

"This year the tour features the Ashmont/ Carruth neighborhood, where ten spectacular houses will be open for ticket-holders to visit," said Earl Taylor, DHS president. "Homeowners will be on hand to talk about the ways they have preserved, restored, and transformed their 19th century houses for 21st century living. Their homes are very special to them, and this is a wonderful way to hear their stories first-hand."

The recently restored 1892 Parish of All Saints, Ashmont, at 209 Ashmont St., will also be open.

The self-guided tour begins in the Guild Hall at All Saints Church. Doors open at 11:30 a.m for ticket sales and advance-purchase check-in. Tickets are $30 in advance, at dorchesterhistorical society. org, and $35 the day of the tour. Tour proceeds benefit the preservation of the Society's historic properties.

Platinum Sponsors are developer Trinity Financial and Verizon; Peregrine Urban Initiatives and the Dorchester Reporter(MediaSponsor) are Gold Sponsors. Additional sponsors include Cedar Grove Gardens, Eastern Bank, Gibson Sotheby's International Realty, John Hancock Investments, the New England Carpenters Labor Management Program, and United Prosthetics.

Many houses on this year's tour date from the 1880s, which was a period of eclectic experimentation and originality in architectural design. Various elements of the Stick, Shingle, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival styles might all be combined in one building, but a strong commitment to craftsmanship and quality of materials is evident throughout.

'Net-zero' condos to replace empty lot near Codman Square

(Continued from page 1) Each unit will come with a deeded parking spot on-site and there will be two additional guest spots in the rear, along with two set aside for the retail space.

Co-owner Kristine Piatt explained, "We're trying to give everyone all of the amenities that a luxury building has, but in an energy efficient, environmentally sensitive way that is beyond luxury. Because luxury is often not meant to last. It's meant for show and eye appeal, but the luxury in this building is in the infrastructure of the building. The insulation, the windows, the high efficiency appliances that we're using; that's where the luxury

It is set to be a "netzero" building, meaning that the amount of energy used on an annual basis will be roughly equal to the amount of renewable energy created and supported by its infrastructure. An array of more than 120 photovoltaic solar panels will be installed on the roof.

The Piatts want the decor and building aesthetics to match the sustainable features of the building, with white walls and light wooden counters, shelves and accents. Each bedroom and living room in the building will have at least one five-foot window that will provide natural light for the space. Outside, they have planned out a communal patio area, with a grill and picnic table for the residents. There will also be a covered back porch area with bicycle storage space.

The building will be fully accessible with an elevator and Type A apartment units, meaning that they will feature five-foot turning radiuses, lower shelving, lever type door hardware, tilt-turn window handles, and lower kitchen workstations and bathroom counters.

Other sustainable elements that the building will feature are its heating and cooling systems, which will both be run on recycled air. "Each unit will have its own heat pumps," Piatt continued. "The pumps function with high efficiencies, and are supposed to be 80 percent efficient at

-14 degrees Fahrenheit." In fact, each unit's dryer will not need their vents to be cleaned because they are heat pump dryers, acting as a dehumidifier for clothes, which has the added benefit of being cheaper than heating them and avoids the collection of lint. Each bathroom will also have low flush toilets (.8 gallons per flush).

Tom Piatt further expressed the necessity for such sustainable technology in the construction of modern buildings.

"We don't know where our energy will come from in the next hundred years, but we know that society is in transition, so we can't build for the past," said Piatt.
"We've gotta build for the future."

The property is set for completion in August and will be marketed by Galvin Group Real Estate. There is no tenant yet for the 850 square foot retail space on the ground floor.

Dot's Tyler La delivers student commencement address at Suffolk

When Thinh "Tyler" La, of Dorchester, was assigned a marketing class data project in conjunction with the Boston Red Sox, he didn't know anything about the game or the team. In fact, having arrived in America at age 17, he had never set foot in Fenway Park.

However, the Suffolk student embraced the challenge with confidence.

"I knew I could do the work," said La, Class of 2017. "I'm a numbers guy.'

He and his classmates were asked to generate data about a Red Sox promotional program aimed at attracting more college students to games.

They conducted primary and secondary research and analysis to evaluate program effectiveness. Then the students developed a strategic marketing plan aimed at increasing ticket sales and brand awareness.

"Experiences like this helped me to understand myself a little better and generated more interest in what I wanted to do," said La, who graduated with a double major in Marketing and Information Systems.

Before Red Sox home games, La could be found handing out one-page surveys to young people outside Fenway Park. However, after a month he was rewarded with a ticket to his first game, a moment he will never

"It was beautiful," he recalled. "The field, the lights, the people-it was more than I expected. The crowd's enthusiasm made me excited."

La's life story was revealed when he auditioned to be this year's student commencement speaker for the Sawyer Business School. Taking a deep breath, he began:

"I was born and raised in Vietnam. When I was young, my family didn't have much; we lived for under $2 a day for four people. My very first words of English were taught by the foreign volunteers who came to my country to help children and families who lived under the poverty line."

La nailed the audition and spoke at the May 21 Business School undergraduate commencement.

After moving to the United States, La settled in with his aunt and uncle in Dorchester, entered the international baccalaureate program at the Newman School in Boston, and then applied to college.

"Ichose Suffolk because I personally related to the University's history, mission, and values," said La. "In the past four years, Suffolk has allowed me to thrive, connect, fail, and develop. It has changed my life in such ways that I couldn't have imagined."

With Suffolk's help, La landed a marketing internship with the Mayor's Office of Workforce Development. He developed a government services marketing plan for the tax season, identified new marketing channels using Google Analytconstructed a photo marketing campaign.

"Every single opportunity I had at Suffolk made me believe in my ability to eventually work in the marketing and information systems field," he said. "It is an amazing feeling to find a career path that can integrate both of my biggest strengths – creativity and analytical thinking."

La can add leadership to his set of skills due to his active involvement with the Boston chapter of AIESEC, an international, youth-run organization that aims to develop leaders and connect the world through global volunteer and internship opportunities.

Among La's responsibilities as a member of the AIESEC student executive board were ics, and researched and leading and training a team developing strategies for social media, content marketing, event planning, and public relations. This role taught him how important it is to "communicate and inspire others" when managing a group of people.

Management and En $trepreneurship \, Professor$ Laurie Levesque, a mentor to La, said that he has taken full advantage of all that Suffolk offers.

"He completed a strong academic program, studied at our Madrid campus, and has contributed to the vibrant, diverse student community," said Levesque.

"He has also added value across a number of settings - in the classroom, in club meetings, and in his presentations to local executives.

This year La received the Business School Outstanding Student of the Year Award from the Student Government Association, the Outstanding Senior of the Year Award, and the Academic Achievement Award from the Information Systems and Operations Management Department.

La plans to return to Suffolk in the fall for the Business School's master's program in business analytics. His goal is to become a marketing analytics management consultant.

"When I was young, I never thought that I would be able to attend college" he said. "Today, I am beyond grateful to Suffolk for giving me the opportunities to learn and explore my potential."

DORCHESTER HISTORICAL SOCIETY

In response to our first post last week about the Society's World War I materials, Marti Glynn offered information about another Dorchester soldier:

Francis G. Kane of Dorchester, 23 was killed in action on April 12 1918 at Apremont, in the battle of Bois Brule. He was a member of the 26th 'Yankee' Division, 52nd Brigade,104th Infantry. In 1920, the Boston City Council named the intersection of Bowdoin Street and Winter Street after him. In addition, the American Legion's Francis G. Kane Post #60 was named in his memory.

Francis Gerard Kane was born on January 21, 1895 to Robert Kane, a newspaper compositor, and Mary G. Jordan, the second of three children, between his older brother Joseph R. and his sister Mary. By 1910 the family lived at 1B Puritan Avenue, in the Mt. Bowdoin neighborhood of Dorchester. When Francis registered for the draft on Jan. 5, 1917, he was employed as a clerk at the American Agricultural Chemical Company on State Street.

Getting on the ballot should be a challenge

Mary Franklin, who hoped to challenge Martin Walsh as a candidate for mayor of Boston this fall, did not make the ballot. Franklin, who announced her plans to run almost two years ago, failed to collect enough valid, certified signatures.

Current law requires that candidates for the office of mayor submit at least 3,000 signatures of enrolled Boston voters to earn a spot on the September ballot. Four men- Martin Walsh, Tito Jackson, James Wiley and Robert Cappucci- made it by submitting more than the required amount by the deadline, May 23.

Franklin is crying foul. In an interview on NECN, she claimed that the certification process favors better-financed candidates. She also claimed that one of the four— she did not say who — "fraudulently" collected signatures by claiming that the petition he circulated was for a rent-control measure, not a nomination for mayor of Boston. Her charge has not been verified.

Franklin also claimed that the process is unfair because as she alleged, better organized candidates collected thousands more signatures than needed. "The pickings are not that prosperous, if you will," Franklin told reporter Sue O'Connell, adding that 'you can only sign for one mayoral candidate.'

But her allegations are off base.

Here are the facts: Any candidate for mayor is given a window of three weeks to accumulate the required 3,000-plus valid signatures and submit them to the city's Election Department for review and certification. Election officials will count and certify 3,000 voters—plus an additional 20 percent of that 3,000, or 600. As each of those 3,600 names are checked off the voter list, they are then "off the table" for any other candidate for that same office.

That means that although you as a voter can sign the petition to nominate as many candidates as you'd like, it will only be counted once, assigned to the candidate who gets that signature into the Election Department first Mayor Walsh's campaign reported that his volunteers gathered 38,521 signatures for his re-nomination. More than 12,000 of those names were gathered on the first day of eligibility.

But, in the final analysis, Walsh's team took no more than 3,600 potential nominators out of the pool of potential valid signatures, because election officials stop counting after they hit that number. At most, the four candidates who made the ballot took a total of 14,400 names off the list.

It's important to note: More than 227,000 Bostonians voted in last November's election. And that's just 57 percent of the people who were registered to vote in the city last year.

It's not easy to mount a citywide candidacy for mayor or at-large council (a seat that requires only 1,500 certified signatures). Nor should it be.

Contenders for an office of such importance should have the requisite organizational skills — and hustle— to gather a reasonable amount of support from their neighbors. Three thousand (or 3,600) in a city with well over 300,000 registered voters is a challenge, but hardly burdensome for a viable contender for this critical office.

If someone used subterfuge to gather names for the ballot this fall, that's a notable and serious allegation and one that should be exposed. But there are plenty of potential nominators in our communities - registered and active- whose signatures could have been counted had they been gathered. To suggest otherwise is not fair or accurate.

Convention update: Dot delegates riding a wave of energy in state's political pond

By Edward M. Cook SPECIAL TO THE REPORTER

To catch a wave you have to be looking for it. The Massachusetts Democratic Party's annual convention last weekend was one place to find some forward motion in our state's political pond. The question is: What is causing the wave? An answer could be found by looking at who was there on Saturday, listening to what were they talking about, and asking: What do they want?

The presence and leadership of Dorchester people at the Democratic Party's annual state-wide convention in Worcester was impressive and, more importantly, indicative of a rising wave of energy moving through the state. On one hand, Dorchester's Ward 15 party committee members worked the First Suffolk delegation as tellers. And, of course, the ever-present chair of the Ward 17 committee, Joyce Linehan, was the mother hen of the delegation. Nor was anyone surprised to see Ward 15's Sandi Bagley and Charlotte Golar-Richie on stage addressing the entire convention about party charter matters and education scholarship awards.

The real story of the convention, though, was what was new. You had to watch the action on the floor. Picture a field of tall grass swaying in the wind, except for trails of grass-tops moving out of sync with direction of the wind. One of those creating these wayward trails was a young resident of Dorchester, Jared Hicks, who is among the most eloquent and active members of a movement called Our Revolution Massachusetts (ORMA), a descendant of the Bernie Sanders campaign that is, in turn, part of an alliance with Progressive Massachusetts (and its Dorchester affiliate) and other progressive organizations.

ORMA et al. transformed the convention from a snoozer to a vibrant venue for an exchange of ideas. This was an "issues conventions," the place where the party platform is developed for the next year's elections for the Legislature, statewide positions like governor, as well as congressional and presidential elections. These issue conventions are traditionally the "inside baseball" debates that only the devotees of parliamentary procedure truly enjoy. Not so this year.

ORMA and the Progressives brought to the floor for debate 17 platform and state party charter proposals that not only stirred imaginations but also, and more importantly, stirred the fire in the bellies of delegates. When the clock struck 10 a.m., all 17 proposals had more than enough signatures to bring them forward for debate. Such a thing had never been done before.

And look at who was in the hall. Of the almost 4,000 delegates – the largest-ever turnout to an issues convention – more than 1,300 – the largest number of new delegates ever-had never attended a convention until this year. These were young people looking for a place to fight back against Trump. Few of them had ever been politically

To longtime activists like the former head of MoveOn.org/Boston from Ward 16, Neponset and Popes Hill, add the newbies, more wayward trails in the tall grass, from ORMA and Mass Progressives and then add them to the core Democratic Party base with its majority of old salt attendees.

Finally, append the messages from the featured speakers, especially Congressman Jim McGovern and US Sens. Ed Markey and Elizabeth Warren. The latter two just about tore the house down. The crowd was on its feet cheering and applauding so loudly by the end of Warren's speech that the only way her last four sentences could be understood was by reading them off the big-screen subtitles.

Their message spoke to the hearts in that crowd: Fight for the values of Massachusetts against the values of the Trump administration. That was what people were hungering to hear.

Markey said that Donald Trump is the greatest organizer for the Democrats. But it's not just for Democrats. Groups are forming spontaneously across the state in opposition to the president. A while ago, someone posted notice on the Nextdoor Neighbor/Dorchester site about a meeting for those looking for "something to DO," and 20 people showed up on a cold winter night.

There are plenty of people across the state creating their own trails in the grass; they are "mad as hell and are not going to take it anymore." They are looking for targets in 2018. In our blue state, that limits the faces in the bull's eye to one man, Governor Baker.

Cynics speculate that organizing for an "issues convention" is a flash in the pan, a poor use of energy that is not transferable, that will peter out. I bet Charlie Baker is looking at those wayward trails in the grass and taking notice.

News Background

Bill would raise juvenile delinquency age to 21

Proposals have been offered in Massachusetts to raise the age limit for young people to have their criminal cases heard in juvenile court.

Defendants 18 and older are currently tried in adult court and subject to adult penalties.

Bills scheduled to be heard on Monday by the Legislature's Judiciary Committee call for gradually raising the upper age in delinquency from 18 to 21. Referring to those in that age group as "emerging adults," supporters of the proposals say the juvenile justice system is better equipped to handle their cases and provide rehabilitative

Exceptions could still be made to try young people as adults if they're charged with serious crimes such as murder.

The legislation would also bring the minimum age for juvenile court jurisdiction up from 7 to 12.

City must lead on climate-change issue

To the Editor:

Since Donald Trump removed the United States from participation in the Paris Agreement on climate change, it has been heartening to see governors and mayors pledge to hold their states and cities to the standards of the agreement. Last week, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh was one of more than 200 mayors who pledged to "adopt, honor, and uphold" the Paris agreement. Such commitments are vital at a time when the federal government is not responding to the threat of global climate change.

How will Boston adhere to that pledge and cut its emissions? "Renew Boston" is a great city program that help residents and small businesses achieve greater energy efficiency. However, our emissions goals cannot be met through efficiency alone. Boston must move toward more renewable power sources.

Through Community Choice Energy (CCE), the city of Boston can use bulk purchasing power to buy renewable energy for residents and small businesses. Neighboring towns have adopted CCE to purchase more renewables, keeping prices stable. (For more information, see communitychoiceboston.org, a website sponsored by several local climate groups.)

Boston residents are looking for strong leadership on climate change. City Councillors Matt O'Malley and Michelle Wu are co-sponsoring an initiative to bring Community Choice Energy to Boston. If Mayor Walsh wants to honor last week's pledge, his administration should implement this impactful Whittier Street Health Center opens satellite clinic on Blue Hill Ave.

By Jonathan Innocent REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

The Whittier Street Health Center, with its main site located on 129 Tremont St. in Roxbury, officially opened a new satellite clinic at 278 Blue Hill Ave. during an open house and ribboncutting event on Friday, June 2. Whittier Street Health Center President and CEO Frederica Williams emphasized the necessity for Whit-tier Street " to further penetrate areas that have significant health issues." The new clinic is located across from the Haynes Early Education Center near the intersection with Quincy Street, a neighborhood along the Dorchester and Roxbury border that Williams said is eager to have more accessible and affordable health care options.

The facility includes a full-service pharmacy, primary care and urgent care services, mental health and nutritional counseling and WIC services. A celebration at Blue Hill Avenue station groundbreaking

By Jennifer Smith REPORTER STAFF

Officials ceremonially broke ground on the Blue Hill Avenue commuter rail station on Monday, kicking off construction for the new Fairmount Line connection point that is expected to open in Gathered on a drizzly morning, city and state leaders celebrated the milestone event in the $16.97 million project. The station will feature a single central platform, be accessible from covered ramp entrances on Blue Hill Avenue and Cummins Highway, and give Mattapan residents access to a 20-minute trip downtown.

The Fairmount Line is "a great deal," said MBTA Acting General Manager Brian Shortsleeve, noting that its fare is comparable to the cost of a normal subway ride. Trains run every 40 to 60 minutes, connecting the Readville area of Hyde Park to Mattapan and Dorchester on their way to South Station.

"One of our most important tenets as an administration when it comestopublic transportation is that we invest in our core systems," Gov. Charlie Baker said at the groundbreaking site. "Our plan over the course of the next several years is to invest billions of dollars into what I call 'the boring stuff' -- signals and switches, power systems, electronics, tracks, infrastructure, and yes, stations. And this is part of that investment."

Baker said he hopes that the station, part of $130 million invested in the Fairmount line, will boost ridership "and most importantly, give more direct access to a very fair and affordable ride into Boston for folks who live in this community."

hailed the Blue Hill Avenue stop, which will serve some of the most densely populated areas of the Fairmount Corridor, as another big step for the underserved community.

"We look forward to the day when we have rebranded this line as rapid-service transit, which has been our goal since the beginning," said Mela Bush-Miles with the Fairmount/ Indigo Transit Coalition. "Get that last color on the spider map of the MBTA: The Indigo Line."

The Blue Hill Avenue station is the fourth and final Fairmount Line station mandated as part of a Big Digrelated lawsuit. A Talbot Avenue station was built in 2012, and the Newmarket and Four Corners/Geneva Avenue stations were completed a year later.

"Transportation is ultimately about connections, connecting people to the regional economy, connecting neighborhoods to opportunities in downtown Boston," said Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack. "And the Fairmount Line is a big part of it, but it's not the only part," she added, listing investments in the Mattapan high-speed trolley line, the Silver Line, and the local bus system. "Because at the end of the day, the more options that people in these neighborhoods have to get where they need to go, the more opportunities they will have," she said.

Going forward, some train service will be impacted by the construction. Weekend trains are being replaced with shuttle buses between the Morton Street and Readville stations. Buses will also replace the last two outbound weekday trains, Train Nos. 787 and 789 leav10 p.m. and 11 p.m., and make every stop through Readville.

"This has been a while for us to be at this moment," said state Sen. Linda Dorcena Forry, who grew up in Uphams Corner and is a longtime Fairmount rider. The station has been a longer process, she said, in part because of the community's involvement with the MBTA in shaping the project.

"What's important

another station here in Mattapan," she said. "This is about access, and this is about more opportunities in our community of Mattapan to be able to get plugged into other areas of the city and to get plugged into jobs. So, so critical."

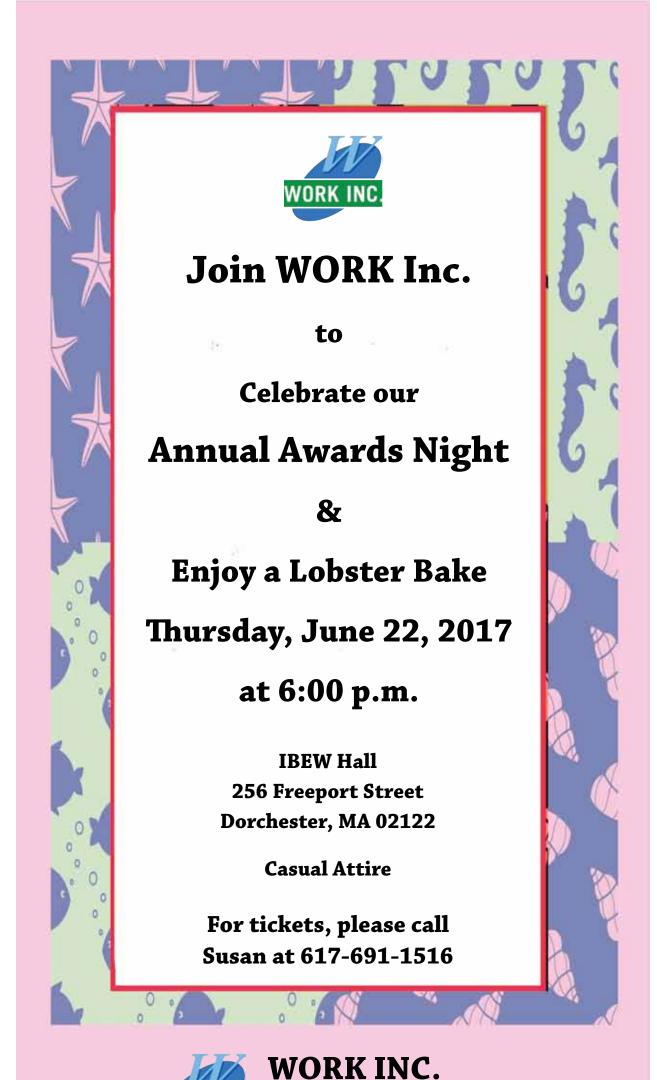

State Rep. Russell Holmes, who grew up not far from the station site, said his options as a kid had been limited to catching the 31 bus Transit advocates ing South Station at hereisthatwe're having Mattapan high-speed trolley. Both would only let him connect up with the Red or Orange line, not whisk him downtown on a non-stop route. He said he hopes the new station would also serve as a catalyst to revive development planning at the nearby vacant Cote Ford site.

The importance of access in Mattapan was echoed by state Representatives Dan Cullinane and Evandro or walking over to the Carvalho, who both pointed to the link between transportation access and economic well being.

"I know we're here under a tent, but this is a beautiful day,' Cullinane said, smiling broadly. "This is a milestone for Mattapan. Any time when we have $17 million coming right here to build a station is a beautiful day. The weather can do whatever it wants out there."

Ruminations: Patriots, Tiger, Bruins, Gronk, and Ali vs. US

The seasons crunch, these days. Spring rolls into summer, bringing with it a flood of pre football-season annuals, dope-books, treasure troves of analytics, and if you've checked out much of it (proof of being the proud possessor of an idle mind, by the way), you know this much: The Patriots had better be ready to go unbeaten, untied, and rarely scored-upon in the coming season, wire to wire.

Nothing less will be

justifiable. There's not a gridiron savant, media wise guy or Vegas handicapper so much as hedging. The consensus that the defending champs are, however improbably, the NFL's most improved team is universal. There's no dissent, nor whiff even, of a little willing suspension of disbelief if only for argument's sake. The tub-thumping is deafening. The bandwagon is rolling a month before camps open. Why bother to play? It's already over.

You can just imagine how much all this runaway euphoria does not amuse Bill Belichick, the relentlessly grim orchestrator of this budding masterpiece. The dour Boss will not be comfortable with the notion that the only team he has to fear is his own. But it's a monster he created. Now he gets to live with it. Seems reasonable!

Taking stock of where Tiger's at

In the wake of his latest personal fiasco might it be time for the sports world to stop making excuses for Tiger Woods? He's had huge physical problems, which may seem unfair, but all that goes with the territory of sport - even in golf – and the ranks of those who've suffered as grievously while having had nowhere near as much good fortune stretch from here to eternity.

Sympathy for a fellow who has fallen so far is not unreasonable. But the most painful fact of the matter is that Tiger Woods has brought much of his grief down upon himself. Too often that unpleasant reality is ignored or glossed over in justifications one finds weak. Still, the compensations he has so long enjoyed continue.

According to those who keep such statistics, Tigers Woods' earnings last year totaled $45 million even though he won very little, had no impact on major tourneys, and was forced by health problems to withdraw from still others.

Granted, money is not everything. One assumes Woods would trade a whole helluva lot of it for the restoration of his former dominance in his game, eminence in the culture, and peace in his personal life. Such losses are indisputably sad. So, too, have been the mistakes he's made in abetting them.

To Bruins: Don't overthink things

It might be easy for the Bruins to assess their Stanley Cup experience with Ottawa and draw the wrong conclusions. After all, the gritty Senators came within an unlucky puck-bounce in Game 7's doubleovertime of stunning the Penguins, thereby making it to the Finals. Equally razor-thin was the margin by which the Bruins got ousted by the Senators in Round One: All four of their excruciating losses were by one goal, three of them in overtime.

How facile might it be for the Bruins' brain trust to trip over their own deductive reasoning and falsely conclude they're equals and are but half a break and a friendly referee's favorable whistle from being where the Penguins themselves now sit, within the grasp of the Cup. That would be folly, of course. But the danger- given the level of experience of said brain trust – exists. Would that it were so simple.

What's up with Belichick and Gronk?

Among Bill Belichick's celebrated strengths is his iron grip on his troops. His ability to exert fierce discipline without sacrificing devotion ranks with the wiles and guiles of such fabled military high-rollers as Stonewall Jackson and Georgie Patton, et al. His intolerance of the most trivial indiscretions of even his most earnest, loyal, totally obedient slugs is yet another staple of his gathering legend.

So the question of why he puts up with the childish nonsense of his highly talented but often indisposed tight end, Rob Gronkowski, has become fascinating. Last summer the Gronk achieved stardom with his entertaining dance routines on cruise ships only to have his football season shortened once again by another round of serious injury. A connection? Who knows!

But then during this off-season — only weeks after back surgery — we have Gronk rehabbing by doing WrestleMania. He got the huge attention he obviously craves by jumping into the ring to battle wild and crazy fellow-wrestling maniacs on live TV. One doubts this amuses Belichick, but he goes on letting Gronk be Gronk.

Would Belichick put up with this from a Julian Edelman or Malcolm Butler? But then, of course, neither would go there, nor would others dare. Gronk did partake of recent off-season practices held in secret. He reportedly looked "good." But then Gronk always looks good – in merry May!

Montville takes up Ali's fight vs. US

Lastly, old friend Leigh Montville, one of the more prolific of our contemporary literati, has a fresh and valuable perspective on Muhammad Ali for you to savor. Leigh focuses on Ali's most important battle and the one that insures his place not just in sports annals but also in our entire history – his fight with the United States Government (1966-1971) that ended up in the Supreme Court.

The author of seven major works, including, most especially, a sheer masterpiece of a Ted Williams biography, Monty's huge reportorial skills shine in all his labors. Ever the intense observer, he's a relentless gatherer of details, a superior researcher, and maybe the best interviewer I ever competed with in the workplace. How so, you ask? Because when e talks to someone, he listens to what they say, really listens.

Such skills were vital assets in the probing of AIi's complex tale and if you think you already know this character, understand that the antics in the ring and their companion theatrics were but one dimension. There was all the rest, decidedly more important issues of race and religion, crisis of authority, and rage in the streets, Vietnam, and Islam. This is the epic world of Muhammad Ali that Montville engages.

Not an easy chore. But Montville has taken it on. No surprise there. "Sting Like a Bee" is the title. You'll love it!

Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester Awarded $100K Cummings Foundation Grant Funds Healthy Meals program over the next three years, providing snacks, lunch, dinners

Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester is honored to receive a $100,000 grant from Cummings Foundation through their "100K for 100" program. BGCD was one of 100 organizations chosen from a total of 549 applicants from around the state during a competitive review process. With the conclusion of this grant cycle, Cummings Foundation has now awarded more than $170 million to local nonprofits alone. This is the first year that Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester has received funding from the Foundation.

The $100,000 will be awarded over three years and will be allocated toward the Healthy Meals program that currently provides meals and snacks to 1000 youth per year at Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester, including those in the Early Education program and school-aged members. During the school year members receive a snack and dinner each day, and over the summer and school vacations breakfast and lunch are offered to younger members, and dinner and a snack are available for teen members who are at the Club later in the day. Those enrolled in the Early Education program receive breakfast and lunch year-round. Access to meals over the summer can be especially important to many school-aged youth, who would otherwise go hungry without school meals.

"Nonprofit organizations like Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester are vital to the local communities where our colleagues and clients live and work," said Joel Swets, Cummings Foundation's executive director. "We are delighted to invest in their efforts."

The Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester Healthy Meals program provides members with nutritious meals to youth aged 6 months to 18 years, in accordance with the MA Department of Elementary & Secondary Education, Office of Food & Nutrition guidelines. Meals incorporate proteins, grains, fruits and vegetables, as recommended by the DESE, and are cooked fresh every day on location. No member of Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester need go without a healthy, warm meal. This Cummings Foundation grant will allow BGCD to run the program even more effectively for the next three years and Nutritious meals are essential for growing children, and not just to keep the belly from growling. Nutrition plays a role in health later on in life, in behavior, and ability to concentrate and learn. Children who don't have to worry about where their next meal is coming from are able to focus on being a kid and getting as much out of their school and afterschool experience as possible.

BGCD provides over 120,000 nutritious meals and snacks to members throughout the year. In addition to youth members, families of members are welcome to come in for a hot meal in the evening too. Everyone can feel comfortable accepting a meal, as they are available to any and all members and families, regardless of income. Once a member has paid the $5 membership fee for joining the Club for the year, they are invited to eat every evening that the Club is open.

Many families in Dorchester suffer from limited resources and lack of access to healthy, affordable foods. Food insecurity can result in cycles of food deprivation and overeating, and high levels of stress, anxiety and depression. For many parents the thought of rushing home after a long day of work to prepare something for their children to eat adds more stress to an already difficult day. Instead, through the BGCD Healthy Meals program, they can meet their children at the Club, knowing that they had a chance to attend a music lesson or swim lesson or art class and have already finished their homework. A warm, healthy meal is already waiting for the whole family and they can relax and enjoy it with each other and friends and neighbors. An easygoing conversation during meal time engages the families and creates a community experience. It isn't about eating fast or grabbing something quick and cheap. It is, in fact, quite enjoyable.

Cummings Foundation aims to give back in the areas where it owns commercial buildings, all of which are managed, at no cost to the Foundation, by its affiliate Cummings Properties.

Cummings Foundation, Inc. was established in 1986 by Joyce and Bill Cummings of Winchester. With assets exceeding $1.4 billion, it is one of the largest foundations in New England. The Foundation directly operates its own charitable subsidiaries, including two New Horizons retirement communities in Marlborough and Woburn. Its largest single commitment to date was $50 million to Cummings School of Veterinary Medicine at Tufts University. Additional information is available at www.CummingsFoundation.org.

Port Norfolkers say traffic's the big hurdle

(Continued from page 1) during the presentation when it was built, that's the marina, the develop-400 years throughout the history of Boston, and there's always been some sort of port or maritime use," said Kevin Deabler of RODE Architects. "It's kind of a very special place for that reason, among others."

The plans are, developers note, at an extremely early stage. While they have a preliminary idea on green space, building type and layout, nothing is set in stone and the community's input will be incorporated throughout the process.

In addition to the housing, hotel, retail and marina pieces, current development plans have about 71,300 square feet of boat storage, sales and service facilities being razed to make way for a seven-building, 330,000-square-foot Neponset Wharf project on the river side, according to a letter of intent submitted to the Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA).

Deabler highlighted the proposed public space for the stretch of land closest to Tenean Beach. "When you're out there, the views are amazing, and right now they're just not accessible to the public," he said.

 $Nearly\,every\,question$ raised by attendees came back to traffic and zoning. The site is accessible by Port Norfolk, Lawley, and Walnut streets, all of which pass through a primarily residential area. The Port is also, attendees noted, a public transit desert. They complained of unreliable bus service and a lack of access to the Red Line as it passes nearby en route to Braintree. The 195 parking spaces proposed for the project would need to accommodate cars from residents, marina traffic, and any retail uses, a logistical prospect that some met with skepticism.

"I think the entire neighborhood has many, many concerns," one man said. "But I think of two of them; one is traffic, and the other is parking. And my rough guess [is that] you have about half the parking that you'd actually need."

Others made note of a neighborhood planning report put together during Mayor Raymond Flynn's tenure, which they feel should be factored into any new development of that scale.

"The fact is that Port Norfolk is a 19thcentury neighborhood," said Ed Roche. "That's when it was constructed and you see everywhere around it the infrastructure and the architecture that was developed at that time, and it's been relatively preserved. And that was identified for us very clearly in that planning report."

As presented on Saturday, the proposal would include four substantial buildings and three smaller mixed-height structure. Placed amidst the proposed green space, one building would include the hotel, a lobby, 43 residential units, about 70 parking spaces in two floors of structure parking garage, and a bike room. Another would hold 21 units of residential housing, along with a lobby and bike room.

The plan calls for marina uses and boat slips to be maintained and renovated, and augmented with new over-water structures and on-land boat storage, according to the letter of intent. Smaller buildings like a "shore shack" for refreshments, locker rooms, bait-andtackle, and fueling areas would be placed around the site.

Alongside the Venezia Restaurantandabutting ment team is proposing a 75-boat boathouse and a fourth mixed-use building. The building would include about 110 parking spaces, room for a restaurant, 86 residential units, a lobby, and a bike room.

The Boston Harbor Distillery, Venezia, and the Boston Winery are outside of the project area and are not included in the plan.

Among the benefits listed in the City Point Capital letter: "Improving existing marine uses; introducing new waterfront uses, including possible water transportation links; enhancing public access to the Neponset River; providing public amenities including various programmed open spaces.'

Thedevelopmentteam is currently focused on

A marketing brochure shows the outline of the proposed development on the Port Norfolk waterfront.

general site layout, with more in-depth rendering to come. In accordance with the BPDA's Article 80 Large Project Review process, an independent traffic study is planned to monitor vehicle flows through the area and any potential points of concern. The next stage in the process is creating an Impact Advisory Group before a series of public meetings kicks off.

Savin Hill projects advance at civic association meeting

By Jennifer Smith REPORTER STAFF

Two Savin Hill projects moved forward at the Columbia-Savin Hill Civic Association's monthly meeting Monday, the last of the full membership meetings before the group breaks for the summer.

Developer James Baker earned support after adjusted his proposal for a new market and condominium on what is now a vacant storefront on Savin Hill Avenue; a proposal to renovate a large Grampian Way property also won popular support.

Baker is proposing a three-story commercial/ retail building for the long-abandoned structure on the corner of Savin Hill Avenue and Sydney Street. In May, he expanded the project to include additional parking and 15 condominiums upon acquiring an additional abutting Sydney Street property.

He reduced that unit count when presenting to the civic group on Monday, now proposing nine units and 13 parking spots. Baker's planned first-floor market is unchanged, though his team is now assessing the best uses for the two stories of commercial space above, with an eye toward community-oriented, family-friendly options.

The development team is focused on sorting through comments and survey results on the project's coUrbanize page. About 295 people took the survey, with 168 indicating that they would be interested in participating in focus groups. As of Wednesday morning, 83 people left further comments on the CoUrbanize project page.

The association membership voted 17 to 7 in support of John Moran's proposal to move his Grampian Way home forward on his parcel, as well as convert it to seven condominium units.

Moran said the property, consisting of a house and carriage house, suffered from water issues and general structural problems. He proposes moving the main house forward 28 feet and restoring the facade and veranda. New additions would connect the home with the carriage house, making room for a total of seven units and twelve parking spaces.

The project needs three variances from the Zoning Board of Appeals: moving the building out of alignment with the existing structure, changing use to multi-family, and excessive floor-area ratio. It is zoned for 0.4 floor-area-ratio, and the plans would bring that to 0.57.

He has a Zoning Board hearing date set for July
