Skeptical about the Morrissey Blvd. lane drop? So is the mayor

By JENNIFER SMITH
NEWS EDITOR

Mayor Martin Walsh has reservations about a controversial proposal by the state Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR) to remove a lane on oft-jammed and oft-flooded Morrissey Boulevard as part of its ongoing redesign.

The mayor was briefed by DCR officials last week on overall design plans for the boulevard that are still in the design phase and not yet funded for construction.

"I have real concerns about three lanes down to two," he told the Reporter in a phone interview on Tuesday. State engineers say fixes to the signaling and lane configuration should ease traffic pressures, but "it's not a signaling problem, it's a problem of congestion and confusion," Walsh said.

DCR hopes to transform the boulevard into a urban parkway from just below Kosciuszko Circle to Neponset, eliminating a lane to add protected bike and pedestrian lanes and greenery, and shoring up the road against increasing incidents of flooding. Walsh theorized that the boulevard should have enough space to add non-automotive infrastructure without losing a lane.

Not everyone in the neighborhood can make it out to public meetings, Walsh said, and he wants the state agency to brief civic associations whose territories will be impacted by changes to the roadway. "There needs to be a more robust community process," he said, adding that hitting all the relevant civic groups should be doable over the course of a month.

"If there's a two-lane proposal and they can prove to everybody that it will improve [traffic]," (Continued on page 23)

An organization founded to ease racial tensions among Boston teenagers is trying to make Town

Some of Boston's most violent streets border the large park, but that's not deterring the employees and volunteers of All Dorchester Sports and Leadership (ADSL), who are working to transform the place. And young

Only five days remain until the Sept. 26 preliminary election for Boston's municipal offices. Voters citywide will be asked to choose one of four men on the mayoral ballot, which includes incumbent Martin J. Walsh. The top two finishers will advance to the November 7 general election.

There will be no balloting for at-large city council on Tuesday since only eight people are competing for four citywide seats. Dorchester and Mattapan voters in Districts 3, 4, 5, and 6 will have only the mayoral race to vote on since Councillors Frank Baker, Andrea Campbell, Tim McCarthy, and Matt O'Malley are running unopposed.

There are heated contests elsewhere, including in District 7, which includes parts of Dorchester and boasts the city's largest field, with 13 hopefuls vying for mayoral candidate Tito Jackson's council seat. In District 2, seven people are looking to succeed Bill Linehan in representing South Boston, Chinatown, and the South End. In District 1, the race to fill Sal

A proposal for a medical marijuana dispensary on Clapp Street was met with some trepidation by community members last week at a public meeting hosted by the John W. McCormack Civic Association and another regular civic meeting Tuesday.

 Dorchester man, 30, held, charged with murders on Expressway, Santuit Street

By JENNIFER SMITH
 News Editor

A 30-year-old Dorchester man has been charged with two homicides that took place in the neighborhood a week ago (Sept. 10) - a double-shooting on the Southeast Expressway that killed a motorcyclist and another that left a woman dead later that night on Santuit Street.

Authorities allege that Lance Holloman shot Scott M. Stevens, 32, of East Taunton and his 54-year-old father around 5 p.m. while riding their motorcycles southbound on I-93 near the Neponset Circle exit. Stevens died three days later of his injuries at Boston Medical Center on Wednesday. His father is expected to survive.

Holloman is also charged with murder for shooting 24-year-old Michaela Gingras. Gingras, a resident of Manchester, N.H., was found with fatal gunshot injuries several hours later inside 11 Santuit St. in Dorchester, officials said. She was pronounced dead at the scene that night.

An obituary for Gingras describes an athletic, persevering young woman. “She was small in stature but was fierce when protecting [her] self and those she loved,” it reads. “She had an amazing heart and soul.”

Lance Holloman

Gingras, the obituary said, “struggled with many things in life, and drug addiction like so many was one of them. She had just started to turn her life around when she was brutally taken from us.”

Holloman is being held without bail at the Suffolk County Jail on unrelated charges, State Police, Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley, and Boston Police said.

Franklin Police arrested Holloman on three outstanding warrants after he crashed a vehicle into a pole in that southeast Massachusetts town early on the morning of Sept. 11. A Franklin police report said Holloman gave them a false name and claimed that he had been kidnapped and was in fear for his life.

One of the outstanding warrants charged Holloman with unlawful possession of a firearm from a May 31 incident, in which he allegedly directed another person to throw a loaded handgun from a vehicle while fleeing a traffic stop, officials said.

Holloman was arraigned on Sept. 11 in Dorchester Municipal Court. A $150,000 cash bail was imposed on the gun case, but bail was later revoked for 60 days on an unrelated pending case charging assault and battery and animal cruelty. An additional $500 bail was added for an unrelated pending case charging operation of a motor vehicle with a suspended license. “Holloman had earlier failed to appear in court on both these latter cases, triggering default warrants in both,” officials said.

The warrants charge Holloman with murder, armed assault with intent to murder, and other offenses. An arraignment date on the murder and attempted murder charges has not yet been scheduled.

Investigations into both shootings remain very active, officials said, and anyone with information on either one is urged to share it with Boston Police at 617-343-4470 or State Police at 617-727-8817.

Dot man charged in Heroin trafficking probe

A 43-year-old Dorchester man is facing heroin trafficking charges after a state and federal probe led to his arrest last Thursday. Bolivar Coste, who is also known as Michael Cortes-Catala, was arrested while carrying more than 40 grams of heroin “near his home,” according to the state Attorney General Maura Healey’s office. The arrest happened in Fields Corner.

A subsequent search warrant of his residence found “ammunition and materials associated with the packaging and sale of drugs,” Healey’s office said in a statement. The arrest was the result of a “long-term” investigation that includes Healey’s office, the DEA, Boston Police and State Police.

Dot fraudster gets prison, faces deportation

A Dorchester resident convicted of fraud and identity theft last June will go to prison for 30 months. Junior Alberto Lopez, 32, was sentenced on Monday in US District Court. He will be subject to deportation to his native Dominican Republic after release.

Lopez was extradited back to the US last year after he fled charges. He was found guilty of conspiring to steal the ID of more than 700 people, mainly in Puerto Rico, to file phony tax returns. Lopez and his partners would then pocket the phony refunds— amounting to over $240,000, according to prosecutors. He must pay the money back under his sentence.

Fairmount Line pilot idea examined in State House hearing

By ANDY METZGER
STATE HOUSE
NEWS SERVICE

Dorchester Rep. Evandro Carvalho wants the MBTA to experiment with changing service on the Fairmount line into something more resembling rapid transit, running trains more frequently and allowing passengers to pay with Charlie Cards. And he wants a new law to do it.

Right now, service on the line runs about once an hour during peak periods, Carvalho told the Transportation Committee on Monday. His bill (H 2723) would direct the T to institute a pilot program running trains every 15 minutes during peak hours and every half hour during non-peak periods.

Fairmount Line trains are relatively empty compared to other lines. According to data the MBTA presented a year ago, the average weekday ridership of 1,038 on Fairmount is the lowest in the commuter rail system.

But taxpayers have already made substantial capital investments in the line, and supporters of Carvalho's bill contend that more frequent service options along the line would entice more people to use it more often.

"It's my own opinion that if they do this right, that particular corridor has the potential to match any other commuter line in terms of ridership," MBTA Advisory Board Executive Director Paul Regan told the committee. "The potential is there for that to be a very, very popular and successful service."

Over the past couple decades, the state and other funders have invested $200 million in Fairmount Line infrastructure, building new stations at Talbot Avenue, Four Corners/Geneva and Newmarket, and making upgrades to existing stations at Morton Street, Uphams Corner, Fairmount and Readville, according to an April 2017 study by The Boston Foundation. A station at Blue Hill Avenue is expected to open in two years.

More than 80 percent of Fairmount Corridor residents identify as a racial minority, and apart from the Mattapan trolley no other rapid transit lines serve areas where more than half of the residents are minorities, the study found. The corridor also has a higher proportion of low-income residents than any MBTA rapid transit line, according to the Boston Foundation.

Carvalho claims that "very modest improvements" caused a three-fold increase in ridership over about four years on the Fairmount Line. His bill would establish a two-year pilot where the T would devote three train sets to the line, synchronize bus schedules with the train, and allow people to use their Charlie Cards with free transfers to other transit options.

"This is the equity agenda that we always talk about and need to put into practice," said Allentza Michel, a transit activist.

Gov. Charlie Baker has emphasized improving the reliability of existing transit before expanding service.

Despite that guidance, the MBTA Fiscal and Management Control Board agreed this summer to pilot regular weekday commuter rail service to Foxborough starting in spring 2019. Boston transit activists expressed concerns that the new Foxborough service would diminish reliability along the Fairmount Line, which would be used to carry trains from Foxborough to South Station.

In May, Congressman Michael Capuano used campaign funds to pay for two weeks of free travel for users of the Fairmount Line and the T later found that by the second week ridership had increased 44 percent compared to the week before the program.

Newmarket Business Association Executive Director Susan Sullivan, who represents food companies and other businesses in the industrial area, said more Latino. They deserve better service and from an economic perspective, they're an underutilized workforce in our city that we need to activate," Walsh told reporters at the business breakfast.

Carvalho's bill, H. 2723, which had a hearing on Monday, aims to boost ridership and access along the 9.2-mile line during a two-year pilot in which the trains would run every 15 minutes at peak times.

A source within the Walsh administration with knowledge of the mayor's plan said the idea will also focus on the frequency principle, but within the constraints of a more standard MBTA pilot. This would be an 11-month window and using trains already available.

frequent trips would enable more people from Boston neighborhoods to avail themselves of more than 28,000 jobs in Newmarket.

"We don't have enough people to fill those jobs on any given day," Sullivan said. She said, "It is a crime that these people in this corridor cannot get to these jobs without taking two buses and a subway."

Dorchester resident Rosalyn Johnson said the existing service is not sufficient.

"We do need rapid transportation in our community," Johnson told the committee. "And I just feel like we were promised service and we don't get it."

"Today, residents in Dorchester, Mattapan & Hyde Park – the residents on the Fairmount Line – have some of the longest commutes and the highest transportation costs of any neighborhoods in Boston," the mayor's office said in a release. "By increasing the frequency of train service on the line, the City aims to increase access to good employment and cultural and recreational opportunities for thousands of residents in this corridor."

The MBTA's Fiscal Management and Control Board would need to review any pilot proposal.

New this election: High school students as poll workers

By BERNADETTE DARCY
REPORTER CORRESPONDENT
Boston voters will see some new faces when they arrive at their polling locations next Tuesday. City high school students have been recruited to help set-up, greet voters and prepare ballots for pick up through a new initiative. Roughly 40 students from 13 high schools attended mandatory training sessions at the BPS headquarters in Dudley Square on this week.

The city's Election Department and BPS History Department joined forces to coordinate the program. The students must be at least sixteen years old to participate.
"By working the polls, students will have a hands-on learning experience," said Natacha Scott, Director of History and Social Studies for Boston Public Schools.

Elections Commissioner Dion Irish and Kyrion Owens, the Civic Engagement Coordinator for the Boston Election Department, were on hand for a training session on Monday, which began with students taking an oath to become an election officer. Students learned about the behind-the-scenes logistics of Boston's polling process. Martin Kain, Administrative Assistant to the Elections Department, lead the training session.

"Engaging students in the citywide election is key for us because this election is personal to them," Owens said. "Not just in Boston, not just in Massachusetts, but nationally, we are concerned with recruiting qualified people to staff the polls."

Kain emphasized the importance of respecting voters, maintaining an accessible polling place, and following laws to ensure the election is free, fair, and efficient. He described the roles and duties of poll workers, preparing students to confidently work the polls.
"We're hoping that exposing people to the process will encourage them to participate," Kain said.

"You'll be working with people from a lot of different backgrounds, so it's important for you to be respectful and remain impartial," Owens told students.
The students will also work the polls in the city's final election on Nov. 7.

Prelims in sight, Walsh and Jackson are doubling down

LaMattina's soon-to-be-vacant seat in East Boston drew three candidates. City Councillor Mark Ciommo in District 9 has two challengers.
The four mayoral candidates, in ballot order, are Jackson, MassHealth customer service representative Joseph Wiley, former police officer and housing advocate Robert Cappucci, and Walsh. Recent polling suggests that the outcome of Tuesday's contest is a foregone conclusion. A new Emerson College poll finds Walsh leading Jackson by a 52-21 percent margin in a survey of 529 likely Boston voters, a gap that is on par with a June poll that also found Walsh with 31-point lead. Cappucci and Wiley pulled 7 and 5 percent in the Suffolk poll, respectively.

Walsh has drawn renewed criticism this week for refusing media requests for public debates before the preliminary. At a canvassing event in East Boston last Saturday, Walsh took issue with that characterization, stating that he would only participate if all four candidates were involved, regardless of polling.
Jackson asserts that the mayor is attempting to duck a conversation, saying, "he can run, but he can't hide from his record, and it is his record that we need to discuss."
But at this stage of the race, the Walsh campaign said, it's unlikely time will be found that fits with all four candidates before the voting on Tuesday.

"There's plenty of opportunity for people to tell me about how I'm doing my job and what I need to do better," Walsh said. "I've agreed in the final ... whatever candidate wins, we will sit down and talk to them about what the debate schedule potentially could be."
Both the mayor and Jackson list education, public safety, and affordable housing as priority areas. Walsh says his investments have targeted lower performing schools, but it is a slow process and standardized evaluations may not be the best fit for schools with substantial populations of non-English speakers. Jackson says he will "fully fund" the Boston Public Schools.

Similarly, Walsh notes that most crime has dropped in the city, and the overall trend is positive year-by-year, although shootings are up this year. Jackson asserts that the Walsh administration lacks a plan to deal with violence and he plans to increase the size of the police force.
Both want more funds to support programs like College Bound Dorchester, Operation Exit, and My Brother's Keeper.
On housing, Jackson says that neighborhoods are being steamrolled with development and the city should double down on protecting affordable housing levels. For Walsh, "it's supply" that Boston needs to offset the streams of new residents, likely more than 700,000 by 2030. He points to a four-percent drop in rents among pre-2010 housing stock as a recent success.

Walsh and Jackson's flashiest rift in governance may be their attitude toward soliciting showpiece projects or investments. Jackson continues to hit Walsh over the abandoned Olympic 2024 and IndyCar proposals, which Jackson says were irresponsible pursuits for the city.
Walsh, in turn, points to bringing General Electric's headquarters to Boston and the city's increasing attractiveness to major companies. His administration is assembling a bid for a new Amazon headquarters, although he told reporters at a roundtable this week that the city's bid will be kept secret until after the deadline has passed.

"Certainly, having Amazon come to the city of Boston and bringing 50,000 jobs and investing $4 to $5 billion, I think that would be exciting and great for the city of Boston," he said.
Jackson said he does not believe that due diligence has been done on the bid.
"Every single economic development deal is not right for the city of Boston," Jackson said, "and thoughtful, mature and stable leadership actually takes the chance to analyze before throwing forward a proposal."

‘We’re trying to save our corner of the world’

Turning spaces into active places

This summer, the old bathhouse that serves as the cramped headquarters for ADSL was bathed in children’s laughter and energy. For the second year, the organization ran a day camp for about 40 kids.

Twenty counselors from BC High and other high schools were inside one minute, outside another, keeping tabs on the kids.

One of the counselors, Jaden Young, from Cambridge, a student at Buckingham Browne & Nichols, says, “I love the kids here.” But he works in a challenging environment. “You see the basketball court right there?” he asks. “We have people who drink, smoke cigarettes, weed over there. The influences are everywhere bad.”

No one was turned away from the day camp. Neighborhood kids whose parents ADSL Executive Director Candice Gartley had never met showed up on their own and were welcomed to meals and activities.

“A lot of the families, the parents, work” Gartley says. “They’re not at home, so the kids hang around at the playground and for me, it’s about creating community. It’s about creating a safe place for these kids.” And it has become a place to hang out.

The once-rundown corner of Town Field that the camp occupies was spruced up this summer. Gartley says dozens of veterans swooped in for four hours and put up bike posts, raised flower and vegetable beds, and replaced windows in the 1899 building.

“We had scoreboards built,” Gartley says. “We had benches built. They re-mulched and pulled all the weeds out. They cut bushes down. They built us a kiosk.”

A safe space, but a tough piece of turf

ADSL was founded during the busing era as the All Dorchester Sports League, a way to get black and white kids together without their beating each other up. The program now fields baseball, softball, and basketball leagues. Gartley says about 200 kids take part in basketball.

“It brings kids from different neighborhoods, which is really unusual around here, especially with gang activities,” he says, “but our basketball court is the safe space where everybody can play no matter what neighborhood they’re from.”

The program operates on a tough piece of turf. On the west side of Town Field are the elegant homes of Melville Park, but the north side leads up to Bowdoin-Geneva, one of the most crime-impacted neighborhoods in the city, so dangerous, in fact, that some parents don’t allow their kids to walk to the park, Gartley says, adding, “We got some push-back because the parents are worried about the safety of their children.” When coaches can, they walk kids to the field. And they keep them there until their parents pick them up.

Once the sun goes down, Gartley says shootings do occur on the basketball courts and drug deals go down under the bleachers. She works constantly to persuade people not to use the field as a bathroom while the kids are there.

“We do have a boarding house across the street, and at the bottom of the boarding house is a liquor store, and then across the street is the park,” Gartley says. “It’s a beautiful place to have a beer and sell your dope, and then when you gotta go to the bathroom, there’s a brick house, so you just go.”

Saving The Field

ADSL offers cooking classes, which have branched out from Town Field to Codman Square. “So today I’m doing a West African peanut stew,” says chef Gates Cleghorn as he shows a small group assembled at his table how to chop onions. The kids bring their parents and grandparents.

Gartley says the idea behind the classes is to get children to learn how to cook nutritiously, and to teach their relatives.

“I want them tasting and trying new things, and sharing that information with their neighbors because there is not a lot of out-of-school activities for them here,” she says.

Gartley is trying to get more organizations to take up a stake in Town Field. Boston Latin School now plays some games there. So does The Roxbury Latin School. She has persuaded the Savin Hill League to use the field, too. And she is trying to persuade Mayor Marty Walsh to revive the practice of flooding the field in winter, so black and Latino and Vietnamese kids can learn to play hockey.

“I found out from my neighbors that 60 years ago, in Town Field, they flooded the field here, and they had a little ice skating rink,” Gartley says. “So I said, ‘We need to create that.’”

The city is replacing the 1940s field lights. The work should end in November, so the field, dark since last year, can resume hosting night games next spring.

“We’re not trying to save the world,” Gartley says. “We’re trying to save our corner of the world.”

This story was first published on Sept. 19 on the website of WBUR 90.9 FM, Boston’s NPR News Station. The Reporter and WBUR have a partnership in which the two news organizations share resources, collaborate on stories and re-publish articles and news reports.

BC High senior helped resuscitate man who had OD’d at Town Field

(Continued from page 1) shouting for someone to call 911 while moving to start CPR on the man. Although he had not been formally trained in CPR, McWade continued his efforts for 10 minutes, keeping the victim alive until EMTs arrived and treated him with Narcan. The entire episode was over within 15 minutes.

“I got upset that no one else was willing to step up,” explained McWade. “I felt so bad for that man.”

ADSL director Candice Gartley said McWade displayed great poise and maturity throughout the incident. “When he returned to sign out for the day, he was very concerned by the fact that so many other people were standing there, but no one stepped up to help,” Gartley said. “I was anticipating more of an overwhelmed young man – not one who felt outraged at the lack of response.”

McWade said he had learned the basics of performing CPR from online instructional videos. He hopes the story will raise awareness about the opioid epidemic that is gripping many parts of the country.

“This was my first encounter with something like that,” he said. “and I think it was a wake-up call that there are people dealing with this crisis who need help.”

McWade is humble on the subject of his heroism, redirecting praise toward his teachers, classmates, and family. “I’ve been fortunate to always be surrounded by good people who try to do the right thing,” he said.

Mayor Marty Walsh, who heard about McWade’s actions this week, issued a statement praising the student: “I commend Ryan on his tremendous efforts and incredible acts of courage to assist this person. Nothing makes me more proud as mayor than to shine a light on the everyday heroes of our community who step up and do what’s right, because that’s who we are as a city.”

Gartley said the situation was yet another example of BC High students making a difference in the community. “We also partner with some area colleges and universities, but hands down, the BC High students are the most reliable and well prepared,” she said.

“BC High is filled with people who do so many great things, whether academically or athletically,” said McWade who was honored by the BC

High community during a school-wide Mass and assembly last week.

“I had never won an award like that before,” he said, “but it was great to be recognized. In my case, it wasn’t a school or sports-related thing. It was a human thing.”

McWade never learned the man’s name, but he still thinks about him. “I would love to talk to the guy, to see if he’s okay,” he said.

BSO, Boston Pops to give free concert in Franklin Park

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops will team up for the first time ever for an open-air concert in Franklin Park on Sun., Oct. 1 at 3 p.m. This performance will mark the BSO's first ever visit to Boston's largest park; it will be the first Pops' show at the venue since 2000.

The program will be divided into two halves. In the first half, The Boston Pops will honor legendary composer John Williams. The 85-year-old composer and Boston Pops Laureate Conductor is the genius behind some of the most beloved and well-known film scores of the past sixty years. Current conductor Keith Lockhart will lead the Pops in a selection of works from some of Williams's most popular scores, including music from Indiana Jones, Harry Potter, and Star Wars.

The tribute to Williams will be followed by a second-half performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will play Shostakovich's Festive Overture, Arturo Marquez's Danzon No. 2, and "Aspiration," the fourth movement of William Grant Still's Symphony No. 1. The program will close with the fourth movement of Mahler's first symphony.

The BSO will host a pre-concert festival in Franklin Park, featuring musical demonstrations, art exhibits, crafts, and other activities for kids and families.

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh took official note of the historical significance of the event, urging Bostonians to take advantage of the opportunity. "It is an incredibly special and historic occasion to offer the residents of Boston the opportunity to hear the world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra and Boston Pops perform at Franklin Park," he said. "This free concert and festival will be a memorable celebration featuring the very best of our talent in Boston, and I encourage people from every corner of the city to attend this October."

Keith Lockhart invoked the park's name-sake in his endorsement of the concert: "Benjamin Franklin, for whom Franklin Park is named, said, 'Tell me and I forget, teach me and I may remember, involve me and I learn.' We hope to immerse our friends and neighbors of Jamaica Plain, Roxbury, Dorchester, and the greater Boston area in the music of the BSO and Boston Pops, and to create a memorable experience that will inspire them for many years to come."

EMK Institute names new president: Dr. Mary Grant

By REPORTER STAFF
A woman with roots in Dorchester who currently serves as chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Asheville will be the new president of the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate. Dr. Mary K. Grant will begin her role at the Dorchester-based nonprofit in January 2018.

Dr. Grant earned her master's in public affairs from the McCormack Graduate School of Policy and Global Studies at UMass Boston—right next door to the EMK Institute, which opened in 2015. She has served as chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Asheville since January 2015. She previously led the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts—her alma mater—for 12 years.

She was born in Dorchester and raised in Weymouth, according to the Boston Globe.

Victoria Reggie Kennedy, co-founder and president of the EMK Institute Board, said Dr.

Grant was “passionate” about the mission of the Institute.

“She has the experience and vision to inspire the next generation of our nation’s leaders and to lead the Institute into its next phase of growth and development. Now, more than ever, we believe it important to fulfill my husband’s vision of engaging Americans, young and old, in active citizenship,” said Kennedy.

Dr. Jean F. McCormack, a Dorchester native who has led the Institute since 2014, will “actively assist in the transition before stepping down in January 2018.”

“Having the opportunity to work with the talented board, staff, volunteers, and interns at the Institute has been a career highlight,” said Jean McCormack. “I am proud of what we have accomplished since opening our doors, and am inspired by the engaged students and enthusiastic visitors who fill our Senate Chamber. I am confident that Dr.

Grant will continue the Institute’s leadership as an innovative, high-tech center of civic engagement and learning.”

“I am honored to join the team at the Institute,” said Dr. Grant. “I am impressed by what is taking place there – the vibrant conversations, the civic learning, the exchange of ideas, and the active demonstration of democracy. The Institute is a place where people from all walks of life can experience the power of finding common ground and shifting political dialogue away from polarization and towards bipartisanship. This work is greatly important and I look forward to the opportunity to continue expanding the Institute’s reach.”

Dot soccer alums off to strong start in high school

Ethan Somers, freshman at John D. O’Bryant High School and Sean Hobbs, freshman at Archbishop Williams High School both scored goals in winning games on their varsity soccer teams last week.

Somers scored a goal in a 3 to 2 win over Saugus and Hobbs scored the first goal in a 2 to 0 win over Sacred Heart of Kingston, according to Dorchester Youth Soccer President Joe Hobbs. Somers and Hobbs were teammates on Dorchester United U14 team last year and have been playing with Dorchester Youth Soccer Travel since 2011. Somers also plays club soccer for Hammer F.C.

The Harbor Point community observed its 30th anniversary as a mixed-income development in ceremonies last Thursday evening in Columbia Point. The now-thriving, 50-acre former public housing project was revived in the 1980s by a joint partnership between the Dorchester-based Corcoran Mullins Jennison Company and community residents. It was the first example of integrating public housing and market-oriented residential housing under the Federal Hope VI program. “They said it was impossible, but the Columbia Point residents believed in us,” developer principal Joe Corcoran said in remarks at the event. “The people who lived here were hopeful.” Pictured above at the event are Joe Corcoran, Sen. DORCHESTER HISTORICAL SOCIETY

At the Dorchester Historical Society, we are in the process of a year-long project to commemorate the 100th anniversary of World War I. Using a collection of photographs we have of WWI Dorchester residents, we will be featuring servicemen and women in a number of short biographies throughout the year. At the culmination of the project, we hope to produce an online exhibit highlighting the lives of these men and women and their service to our country.

Our next biography features Axel W. Lagerquist, who was born on March 23, 1890, in Hjalmseryd, in the Jonkoping region of Sweden. Axel immigrated to the United States in 1908 at age 18 after leaving his father, G. Lagerquist, whom he listed as his nearest relative. He arrived in New York on Oct. 10, 1908, destined for Newton, Mass. Several years later,

Axel W. Lagerquist
he filed his Declaration of Intention to become a U.S. citizen.
By June 5, 1917, when Axel registered for the Draft, he was 27 years old, married to Esther J. Lagerquist, with whom he had one daughter, and living on Norfolk Street in Dorchester. He was a manager of a grocery store, J. T. Connor Co., 2249 Dorchester Ave., Milton and the sole support of his wife. He was tall and slender with blue eyes and blonde hair.

He enlisted in R.A.N.G.E.R.C. and was inducted at Division #21, Boston, Mass. on March 29, 1918, at age 28 at Camp Devens. He served in Company C, 303 MG Battalion, until Nov. 7, 1918 and Company C, 148 MG Battalion until discharge. He became Private First Class on July 1, 1918 and Corporal on Aug. 23, 1918. He filed his Petition for Naturalization on June 5, 1918, and then served overseas until June 29, 1919. He was honorably discharged at Camp Mills, Long Island, New York, on July 7, 1919.

In the 1920 census, the family consisted of Axel, Esther and daughter Ruth on Dorchester Avenue, Boston. He was again listed as a manager of grocery store. In 1930 and 1940 census, the family of 3 was living on Wendell Park, East Milton, Mass. and Axel owned his business.

In 1942, Axel registered for the draft at age 52. He lived on Dyer Ave, Milton and was his own employer at 1168 Washington St., Dorchester. His wife, Esther, was listed as his next of kin. In June 1949, Axel married Janet Frances Bates. He died on Nov. 6, 1969, at age 79, in Wellesley Hills, Mass.

Do you know more about Axel Lagerquist? We would love to hear from you! You can reach us at dorchesterhistoricalsociety.org. Check out the Society’s online catalog at Dorchester. pastperfectonline.com; the archive of these historical posts can be viewed on the website.

Mural elevates Dot’s Vietnamese experience

Using the side of the celebrated Pho Hoa restaurant on Dot Ave as its canvas, Fields Corner will soon unveil a dramatic new mural that will salute the achievements of the city’s Vietnamese community.

The artist behind the work is Ngoc-Tran Vu, best known as “Tran,” who won a $10,000 grant earlier this year to design and paint the mural. Tran lives across the street from the mural site and has been immersed in Dorchester’s civic life since moving here as a child from Vietnam in 1992.

What’s exciting about this public art project is that it’s a team effort in every sense of the word. Tam Le, whose family runs Pho Hoa and the companion Reign Drink Lab, has been an eager partner.

Back in April, Le told the Reporter: “I feel honored, excited, proud. Honored that Tran has decided to use our wall to create what we anticipate to be a beautiful homage to our heritage and community, excited to see the community come together to share the experience of the creation of the piece, proud of Tran and her dedication to the Vietnamese community. I could not think of a more fitting person nor a more fitting medium to achieve this than Tran’s mural.”

Together, Tran and Le organized a diverse steering committee to think through all of the elements of the mural and to engage the community at large. Every step of the project — from materials to the upcoming (Sat., Sept. 30; 10 a.m.-1 p.m.) block party that will serve as the mural’s unveiling— has been detailed on an illustrated blog at Tran’s website, ngoctranvu.com.

The pre-painted boards that are the components of the actual painting will be assembled on the side of the building beginning this week. Even with all of the input from resident and neighbors, the final draft of the mural itself is a tightly held secret.

In a posting in June, Tran noted that the steering committee had narrowed down the main themes of the mural to include “Vietnamese Presence, Unity, and Brighter Future.”

In a statement this week, Tran said: “This project involves the creation of a permanent, large-scale outdoor mural that showcases the history, culture, and vision of the Vietnamese people in Dorchester, Boston’s largest and most diverse neighborhood. In creating and executing this mural project centered on the experience of the Vietnamese American community we hope to raise awareness, facilitate dialogue, and inspire engagement for a more inclusive Dorchester, Boston and beyond.”

The Creative City Initiative of New England Foundations for the Arts (NEFA) gets credit for funding this excellent initiative. The block party, featuring traditional Vietnamese food and drinks and music, that will serve as the unveiling for the mural is open to the public.

It’s purely coincidental that this event comes as the nation is once again pondering the great tragedy of the Vietnam War through the work of the epic documentarian Ken Burns. The PBS series— which is running every night this week— is painful at times, and deeply troubling.

But in Dorchester, one legacy of the complex US-Vietnam era is indisputable: Our neighborhood has been immeasurably enhanced by the presence of the Vietnamese people and their culture. The Pho Hoa mural project is a welcome opportunity to celebrate the remarkable community that we have become.

Remembering a son of Dorchester — the first to fall in Vietnam

Editor’s Note: The following post was published on the Originally from Dorchester Facebook page this week.

After a couple of months of searching I had the honor this weekend of locating the grave of the first Dorchester kid killed in Vietnam, a Green Beret named Bobby Hain, who was so forgotten that until recently his hero square sign at Bailey and Dorchester read “Main.”

He lived on Mt. Vernon Street in Dorchester when he was young, Moreland Street in Roxbury as a teen with his mom, Florence Nadelli and siblings. (His dad was a civilian casualty of the Merchant Marine during WWII.) His family lived at 19 Fuller Street when he was killed by a sniper in May 1963.

Prior to his 12 years in the service he worked with his brother at the Strand Bowling Alley in Roxbury, he was a survivor by his Mom, Step-Dad Donald Nadelli, sisters Mary Ramsey and Jean Costa and his brother Ken who was in the same unit flying missions in and out of Vietnam from Okinawa.

Ken is retired military and lives in North Carolina now and told me he was on one of his seven deployments during the funeral so has never even visited the grave. He doesn’t even have a picture of him.

If you happen to be in Mount Hope stop by the Korean War Veteran’s section and pay your respects.

Why this paper shouldn’t publish an officer’s ridicule of citizens

BY SARA MERAND
SPECIAL TO THE REPORTER

To the Dorchester Reporter’s editorial staff: Several issues need to be addressed with regard to the Sept. 7, 2017, column by Boston Police Officer Mike Keaney.

A piece exclusively intending to ridicule community members is poorly conceived on many fronts, and ultimately is counterproductive for both the police and the publication.

Writing that mocks others might help folks to blow off steam, be intended in good fun, and bolster the sense of humor that so many tough jobs require, but I question whether it’s responsible for such pieces to appear in a neighborhood news publication.

If a teacher were to ridicule students, then an outcry would erupt from families of the students and from the community as a whole. The same would go for a retailer ridiculing customers or a doctor ridiculing patients.

Do students, customers, and patients make objectionable choices sometimes and do things that make the lives of others harder? Absolutely! And I don’t fault anyone for having the occasional cathartic laugh. But a public newspaper is not the appropriate venue for venting frustration through derision that is lacking social context and aimed at community members.

Why would we accept this from a police officer? The type of job someone does and its inherent level of personal danger does not exempt a person from being respectful of the rights and dignity of others.

From a different angle, I wonder what the response would be if a citizen were to write a piece exclusively ridiculing the mistakes and wrongdoings of police officers - not critiquing the police, but simply ridiculing them.

Fraught relationships between the police and the public will not be improved by members of both groups shallowly disparaging each other. Basic human rights and dignity are being undermined openly and aggressively in the current political climate, and I encourage the staff and your readers to ruminate on how to be a voice for progress, respect, and civil rights.

Exploring the broader social and systemic circumstances that lead to crime, including the petty crimes derided in this article, would be a much better use of the Dorchester Reporter’s reach as well as a much more interesting use of Officer Keaney’s extensive experience.

Also, I urge people to reflect on the usefulness of the term “criminals” to describe people’s identities. This label furthers the entrenched systemic barriers to people with criminal records being able to rehabilitate, secure productive employment and education, and have an opportunity to exist as a part of a community - all elements necessary to reduce crime. People involved in crime need not carry that as an immutable identity. In the commission of a crime, one does not forfeit one’s humanity.

Furthermore, in the June 1 vignette, Officer Keaney emphasized that the suspect was not “manly” and thus was laughable, relying on the attitude that stereotypical masculinity is something inherently valuable, and someone lacking it is inherently inferior. This attitude contributes to a culture that allows misogyny and homophobia to go unchallenged, and I encourage us all to avoid complicity in the entrenchment of these attitudes that those in power nationally are attempting to enshrine. For the police specifically, no protective force can do its job when any portion of the population - in this case, people of all genders who are not stereotypically “manly” - is hesitant to call upon them for help.

While I understand that amusing pieces might seem attractive as a way to boost readership, I ask that you please endeavor to amuse us without ridiculing others. I would welcome the voices of police officers recounting anecdotes that changed their thinking in some way, the times when they saw the good sides of humanity, the things they wish the public understood, even venting their anger and criticisms of the dynamics that make their jobs harder and that make people less safe.

Cogent, informed critique and dialogue are essential. I simply see no role for ridicule in moving toward the goal of a more respectful community.

Sara Merand is a Dorchester resident.

Health Matters from Carney Hospital

MEN, QUESTIONS TO ASK YOUR DOCTOR ABOUT PROSTATE CANCER SCREENING

September is Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, which means it is a good reminder to discuss how proper prevention, screening and, if necessary, treatment can address prostate cancer and other common disorders. Talking with your primary care physician will help you make an informed decision about prostate cancer screening.

“All men have a prostate and that means that all men are at risk for prostate problems,” says, Leonid Kotkin, MD, a Carney Hospital urologist. “And for the most part, these risks increase with age.”

In addition to the aging process, experts believe diet, race and heredity may all lead to prostate trouble. The three most common problems associated with the prostate are:

- Prostatitis. This condition develops when the prostate swells or becomes inflamed, usually caused by bacterial infection.
- Benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH). A normal prostate can also grow many times in size when hormonal changes occur after age 40, causing BPH.
- Prostate cancer. Even though prostate cancer is one of the most diagnosed cancers in America, on average men have only a three percent risk of actually dying from the disease. Tumors are often slow-growing and highly treatable. However, patients sometimes experience no symptoms until the cancer has spread. Thus, early detection by your doctor is important.

Symptoms of prostate disease include pain, burning and difficulty in urinating, blood in the urine or semen, painful ejaculation, and lower back pain.

To Be Screened or Not to Be Screened

The medical community previously agreed that after a certain age, all men should be screened for prostate problems. However, the latest medical research suggests that prostate cancer screenings are no longer considered necessary for all men.

For this reason, it is important to talk to your health care provide about prostate screening and ask the following five questions:

1. What is my personal risk for prostate cancer based on my age, race, and family history?
2. What screening test do you recommend?
3. What will the screening test results tell me?
4. If the test results show I might have prostate cancer, what are the next steps?
5. What are my choices for treating or not treating right away and if I receive treatment, what are the treatment choices?

For those who do decide to get screened, the most common exams include:

- A digital rectal exam (DRE): Although some men consider this test embarrassing, it is a quick, simple procedure that could save your life.
- A PSA (prostate-specific antigen) blood test: For men over 50 or earlier for men in high risk groups, such as African-Americans or those with a family history of prostate problems.

- Exodx. A new simple urine test that reduces the need for biopsy by up to 40 percent.

“If diagnosed, a urologist can discuss and determine the best course of treatment for each individual patient,” says Dr. Kotkin. “Treatments for prostatitis and BPH often include a low-fat diet and medications, while prostate cancer is typically treated with chemotherapy, surgery and/or radiation.”

Marvin Diaz-Lacayo, MD

The Boston Planning and Development Agency board last Thursday voted to approve the 17 condominium units proposed for the Scally & Trayers funeral home site in Savin Hill. Support for the project has been mixed among immediate abutters, although comments submitted from the broader Savin Hill and Jones Hill areas were generally favorable toward the proposal.

Owner Giuseppe Arcari plans to develop the 14,688-square-foot parcel at the junction of Pleasant and Pearl streets by constructing a three-story building with 20 parking spaces located underground and an exit onto Pleasant Street.

Project manager John Campbell told the planning board that the community “initially seemed to be more opposed than supported,” but he asserted that the “majority of the community” supported it prior to the hearing.

Neighbors and local civic members have been concerned about the amount of density and potential traffic impacts on the area. Most have spoken approvingly of the design itself. The immediate area includes a troublesome intersection at Stoughton Street, a church, a daycare, and an elementary school.

Designs show a building with a mansard roof and green space buffers around the lot. Of the 17 units, two are designated as affordable in accordance with the city’s Inclusionary Development Policy. Arcari will also contribute $42,000 to the Inclusionary Development Policy Fund, which is used to finance affordable housing across the city.

The project also commits $5,000 each to Project D.E.E.P., Bird Street Community Center, the Edward Everett School, and Dot Art of Dorchester.

Arcari’s lawyer, John Pulgini, said the development team participated in six civic and abutters meetings. They “filed what we thought would be something very spectacular,” he said, and architect Steve Sousa said it was “a gem for the neighborhood.”

Campbell noted that a petition with 85 signatories, started by Pearl Street neighbor Sonia Kaszuba and including several abutters, asking that the unit count be dropped to nine. A public comment period for the latest plans concluded on Aug. 11.

The community comments ultimately supported the project by a count of 58 to 15, Campbell said. A Reporter review of the submitted comments confirms the estimate, although there were also a handful of neutral responses and the estimate does not account for abutters who commented via petition.

Elizabeth Gilvarry, who lives next door to the project site on Pearl Street, wrote that she felt the condominiums would be a good fit for the area but she had been reluctant to say so in public meetings because of the vehement opposition of some of her neighbors.

Arcari and his team were responsive to the area’s concerns, Gilvarry wrote, amending the unit count from 21 to 17 and adjusting the building design and placement on the lot to accommodate her backyard.

The proposal is “a beautiful building design and worthy of the site,” she concluded. “It will be an asset to the neighborhood.”

Gilvarry and others acknowledged the worsening traffic and parking around the area — as well as the dangerous Stoughton and Pleasant Street junction — but said the developers were making a responsible effort with the underground parking and should not be penalized for pre-existing traffic problems.

Donna Aslai, who shares a property line with Gilvarry and the project site, did not submit a comment to the planning agency, but did sign the petition asking for nine units. “As a direct abutter to the property, I strongly object to the proposed size and scale of this development,” she wrote. “It is far too large for the location, and will exacerbate existing issues with density, traffic and noise.”

Mayor Martin Walsh’s office and City Councillor Frank Baker’s office supported the project, Campbell said.

To a board question on how the team planned to address safety and traffic concerns, Pulgini said they conducted a traffic study that “kind of addressed all those things.” They will continue to work with traffic planners and the Boston Transportation Department, he added.

Zoning Board of Appeal approval is still needed for excessive Floor Area Ratio, which is 1.53 in an area zoned for 0.5, for building height, conditional use, insufficient front, rear, and side yards, and parking.

ADUs PROPOSED ZONING AMENDMENT

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27

6:00 PM - 8:00 PM

1 CITY HALL SQUARE

City Hall, 9th Floor

BPDA Board Room

Boston, MA 02201

PROJECT DESCRIPTION:

The Boston Planning and Development Agency will hold a public meeting to discuss a proposed amendment to Article 53 (East Boston Neighborhood District), Article 55 (Jamaica Plain Neighborhood District), and Article 60 (Greater Mattapan Neighborhood District) of the Boston Zoning Code regarding Additional Dwelling Units (“ADUs”). An ADU is a new typology to Boston that could create naturally affordable rental units without significantly changing the fabric of the existing neighborhoods, by allowing owner occupants to carve out space within the envelope of their home for a smaller, independent rental unit.

Neighborhood House Charter School is committed to maintaining a work and learning environment free from discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, pregnancy, gender identity, sexual orientation, marital/civil union status, ancestry, place of birth, age, citizenship status, veteran status, political affiliation, genetic information or disability, as defined and required by state and federal laws. Additionally, we prohibit retaliation against individuals who oppose such discrimination and harassment or who participate in an equal opportunity investigation.

Tito and his Cleveland streakers now face a 69-year-old challenge

On the chance you didn't see it, believe me when I tell you it was just marvelous. When their mainstay, Francisco Lindor, brilliant throughout their epic surge, flailed wildly at a bad pitch in the dirt ending a ninth inning threat against Kansas City and their dramatic date with History, the great crowd fell dead silent. The remarkable winning streak was over, falling a tad short of the ultimate distinction, maybe, but only after making a statement unmatched in a full century. That it was happening in Cleveland, so long the cruel butt of dumb jokes by lame comics, was entirely the point, of course.

The game over, the camera caught the Indians in their dugout – heads down – beginning to exit. And then the crowd unleashed – low at first, but quickly climbing – a mighty roar and it came from deep down in the throat of a battered old industrial town that's been there and seen it all, a mighty bellow that rose into the night and swiftly engulfed the stadium.

The players, looking stunned, turned and paused, but their manager, as usual, was entirely equal to the moment. Out of the dugout bounded Terry Francona, arms raised and hands clapping to return the salute his team was receiving with his players quickly following to partake in the joyful celebration of a memorable thing superbly done. The tribute, thereby, was mutual.

You just don't see stuff like this very often in the games we play and are supposed to enjoy. Rarer still are chances to pay homage to 22-game winning streaks. They don't happen every season or even every century. But the fact that it's Cleveland now reveling in this rich moment really makes it special, a woebegone town and its so long just-along-for-the-ride baseball team, winners of only two championships and four pennants in 117 years of checkered existence, delivering the season's best story thus far. It couldn't happen to more deserving people.

But then, however fascinating and exciting, long win streaks in August and September guarantee nothing come October. When the NY Giants set the all-time record by winning 26 straight in 1916, they finished fourth. There's been silly talk about striking that Giants record from the books because along the way they played a tie-game, called by darkness. You may dismiss that as mere revisionist claptrap. Games called by darkness were common in 1916 when there were, please realize, no lights. Tie-games had to be replayed from the start. In other words, they didn't happen, they didn't count any more than unresolved rain-shortened games would have counted.

Until the Indians came along, the 1935 Cubs had the second longest streak at 21. Managed by Charlie Grimm, those Cubs were interesting, featuring the snappy Hall-of-Famer bound trio of Chuck Klein, Kiki Cuyler, and Gabby Hartnett plus the crackerjack double-play combo of Billy Herman and Billy Jurgens, both of whom much later would have the honor of quite poorly managing very bad Red Sox teams. The streak sparked the Cubs past the Gashouse Gang Cardinals and Bill Terry's Giants in the pennant race. But in the World Series, Detroit's Tigers, led by their G-Men – Brothers Greenberg, Gehringer, and Goslin – romped to the championship.

Of the all-time half dozen longest streaks (19 or more) only two claimants went all the way: the 1906 'Hitless Wonder' White Sox with their peerless pitching staff anchored by Nick Altrock, Doc White, and Big Ed Walsh, and the 1947 Yankees, featuring Joe DiMaggio, Yogi Berra, Phil Rizzuto, and Allie Reynolds, and need you hear more. The 2002 Oakland A's – famed mainly for their enterprising GM's so-called "MoneyBall" shtick – were quickly ousted in the playoffs and have rarely been heard from since. The longest streak the Red Sox ever mounted was 15 games in the sterling season of 1946. Their run cemented them in first-place in April and that's where they remained the rest of the way with the Cardinals and Enos Slaughter, alas, poised in the bulrushes of October awaiting them.

So what does all this suggest about Cleveland's tender hopes this October? It's been nearly seven full decades since the Indians last won it all with the American League's first de-segregated team, amassed by Bill Veeck, managed by Lou Boudreau, starring Bobby Feller, and triumphing in the end over my beloved Braves, which I remember too well. Sixty nine years. It's the game's longest sustained dry spell now that the Cubs have come in out of the cold.

Also remembered well, and with vast sympathy, is how gallantly the Indians went down against those Cubs a year ago with Tito, the manager the Red Sox so cleverly chased away, clearly outwitting alleged genius Joe Maddon in a classic managerial chess. More popular than ever, Francona has become baseball's most respected manager, accorded by students of the game with near genius ratings for his handling of his team during the streak. He can do no wrong these days. His Indians will be pets of the non-aligned this fall (sorry Boston) and the hefty No. 2 choice even hereabouts should the unthinkable happen again to your Town Team!

A week after the all-star break, the Indians were 48-45, leading the Central Division by a half-game. In the subsequent two months they've been a sizzling 45-12 and with a fortnight left, they lead by 15 games. Skeptics wonder if they've peaked too soon. No question such perversity is possible, somewhat comparable happened to your Red Sox just a year ago.

It's Francona's chore to prevent that. He's equal to it.

College & Career Preparation a Priority for Dorchester Teens

One of our primary goals at Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester is to help prepare every child for their life after the Club. This means we try to help them succeed in school, determine their next steps for after high school, and build the connections they'll need to reach their goals.

We are proud to say that 95% of our graduating teens go on to college or a career training program after high school. One of the ways we work to make this happen is through our College & Career Prep program, which is a part of our Teen Center programming. College & Career Prep includes many opportunities for teens to prepare for their next step out of high school, through exam preparation, college and career fairs, college tours, and paid employment placements. Each year, Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester places at least 115 teens in paid employment opportunities, both on-site at one of our three club-houses during the school year, and on and off-site during the summer.

This year, we're ramping up our College & Career Prep program even more and we're extremely excited for all the opportunities that will be open to teens. We have created a designated base for the College & Career Prep program, just outside of the Teen Center. This will be a space where teens can come to work on any of their tasks related to college or career prep, like study, meet with mentors, prep for exams, research colleges, or fill out college applications.

We place a priority on helping teens prep for job placements, because even a first summer job requires teens to meet a base level of experience and expectations. Every teen staff member has an adult mentor who provides feedback and guidance.

Another aspect of the program is College Fellows, which promotes high school graduation and college enrollment through personal goal-setting, focused college preparatory activities, and peer and adult support.

Teens learn about personal finance through the SALT financial literacy course developed by American Student Assistance. Participation is a requirement for all teen staff and College Fellows participants. The 12 course modules include fundamentals, college access and planning, student loans, income and careers, money management, saving and investing, credit and debt management, risk management, and taxes. This online program requires young adults to "master" each module to proceed to the next, ensuring that participants successfully learn and retain the information.

This year, College Fellows will take place on Wednesday evenings at 6PM. Each age group meets monthly, discussing topics most applicable for where they are in the college prep process, with high school Seniors meeting the first Wednesday of the month, Juniors meeting the second, and Freshman/Sophomores meeting the third week. The fourth Wednesday of the month is career-focused and open to anyone.

Our College & Career Prep program is made possible through funding by Bank of America, John Hancock and Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts this year.

For questions about College & Career Prep, or to get involved, contact Tricia Chapple, Education Strategist, at pchapple@bgcdorchester.org.

Medical pot shop eyes Clapp St. site

(Continued from page 1) the Plumbers & Gasfitters Local 12 Hall on Massachusetts Avenue and attracted about 40 people, some of whom who expressed worry about safety, proximity to children, and protecting the increasingly desirable areas of Dorchester. Others noted the value of medical marijuana as an alternative to addictive opioids, pointing to strict regulation and describing most patients as being on the older side and seeking to address pain relief or other wellness concerns.

O'Donovan, a greater Boston native, has worked since 2009 in the medical cannabis business in Colorado, where he opened a 2,700-square foot Natural Selections dispensary facility and an 8,000-square foot cultivation facility.

"Our company currently in Colorado meets the objectives that we strive to replicate here," O'Donovan said, "which include, among other things, consistency and quality control. It's very, very important for patients to know they're getting the same thing over time, that what they have is accurately dosed." The Northglenn, Colo., location has not has any safety issues, he said.

Natural Selections has been approved by the city of Fitchburg for cultivation and dispensing. It is also the only medical cannabis company to be approved to sell in Watertown.

In general, attendees at last week's meeting said they understood the value of medical marijuana – the district voted 68 percent in favor of legalizing it – but they quibbled about the proposed location, which, at just under 700 feet away from the Boston Collegiate Charter School campus, is outside of the mandated 500-foot buffer from locations, such as schools, where children gather.

Attendees at a previous meeting where the proposal was discussed said they feared that drug users from along the Massachusetts Avenue corridor, including the Newmarket area, would wander over to the Clapp Street facility.

Desmond Rohan, president of the Columbia Savin Hill Civic Association, said the "vulnerable" population of addicts around Newmarket are a concern. "We have invested too much this neighborhood," he said, "to have that kind of constituent find its way down to the neighborhood and extended Methadone Mile into the Polish Triangle." He also noted that Clapp Street itself is not well lighted.

Natural Selections offered to make accommodations for some of these concerns. One would set a minimum purchase price of $50 to dissuade individuals who might pull together enough for a quick hit, even with a medical cannabis card. The company also said it was open to a moratorium on seeking expansion into recreational marijuana until 2020.

Dan Linskey, a former superintendent-in-chief of the Boston Police Department and now head of security at Natural Selections, said the team will "exceed" state requirements on safety, including having a person on site for security around the clock and improving lighting around the site. No one would be able to access the facility without showing a valid medical marijuana card before entry, and no excess cash or cannabis would be stored on site when the business was closed.

A city restriction on medical marijuana facilities prohibits them from being set up within half a mile of each other. Given that, and accounting for distance from schools, available real estate, and building specifications, there are relatively few sites across Boston that work for this purpose.

City Councillor Frank Baker told attendees at the first meeting that three other medical marijuana businesses had looked at the same Clapp Street site. While his office will stand with the community, he said, "we could have this exercise going on for the next year."

THANKSGIVING NOVENA

TO ST. JUDE

O Holy St. Jude, Apostle, and Martyr, great in virtue and rich in miracles, near kinsman of Jesus Christ, faithful intercessor of all who invoke your special patronage in time of need, to you I have recourse from the depth of my heart and humbly beg to whom god has given such great power to come to my assistance. Help me in my present and urgent petition. In return, I promise to make your name known, and cause you to be invoked. Say three Our Fathers, three Hail Marys and Glorias. Publication must be promised. St. Jude pray for us and all who invoke your aid, Amen. This Novena has never been known to fail. I have had my request granted. Publication promised.

Skeptical about the Morrissey Blvd. lane drop? So is the mayor

Walsh said, he is open to listening. The Boston Transportation Department is also taking a look at the plans, he said.

The mayor commutes along Morrissey “every single day,” watching traffic that “ebbs and flows” along the route. He notes that the road is used as a cut-through to downtown from areas like Mattapan, Hyde Park, and Milton. Without that route, drivers will try to nip into residential roads to carve time off of their trek, he said.

Although “parkways are for leisurely driving,” Walsh said, “Morrissey Boulevard has always been something of a main throughway, and we need to do what we can to keep cars off the side streets.”

The DCR responded to the mayor’s concerns in an email Tuesday. “In response to issues raised by Boston Mayor Marty Walsh regarding the Morrissey Boulevard redesign project, the Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR) will meet with various neighborhood and civic associations ahead of its next public meeting to present a detailed briefing on the street’s traffic analysis, which was performed as part of the project’s initial design,” a department spokesperson said. “In addition, the Massachusetts Department of Transportation (MassDOT) will fund a peer review of this traffic analysis, which was performed by DCR and its consultant, as well as a Central Transportation Planning Staff (CTPS) analysis of the project’s effect on traffic regionally.”
