Pot shop owners pitch new plan for Hancock St.

After a contentious meeting with some 70 blotters and community members at the Strand Theatre on Monday night, the owners of a recreational marijuana business that they want to set up on Hancock St. near Bartlett Square said they changed their business model from a traditional walk-in retail to an app-based, appointment-driven system.

On Tuesday, co-owner Benjamin Virga said his team decided to make the switch after neighbors spoke out forcefully the night before against the project, pointing to possible problems with traffic and expressing their qualms about having this type of business in the heart of the village.

In an interview with the Reporter, Virga, a real estate broker and property manager, said that “based on the meeting last night and in order to listen to the legitimate concerns of neighbors, the overriding concern on the new site is traffic and its impact, we decided that going forward we will open a reservation-based store that will allow us to

Eversource eyes new electrical line between Dot, South Boston

As part of a broader regional effort to boost electrical service, Eversource is planning to build a new transmission line between Andrew Square and Savin Hill.

The process will kick off with two public meetings this month to brief the community on potential impacts on the public as the work is being done.

Under one plan, Eversource would create a new service line connecting two existing electrical substations, at Dewar Street in Savin Hill, and regional routes north of Boston. The line would be capable of carrying higher voltage loads while also increasing the reliability of the existing infrastructure, Eversource officials said.

“This is a project of regional importance to maintain electric reliability and one of many we’ve undertaking or planning across the Greater Boston and MetroWest regions,” said spokesman Michael Durand in an email. “Essentially, by creating a high-voltage connection between two existing substations, this particular project will provide the DCB an additional option for getting power to where it’s needed most to meet future demand for electricity.”

There are a few options for the route of the new line, said spokeswoman Priscilla Rees. “The preferred route is the Morrissey Boulevard corridor,” she said, adding that Eversource will be working with city and state entities like the Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR) on logistics.

The Morrissey stretch is controlled by the DCR and is in line for a major renovation as a roadway replacement project. This is a factor that often leaves the major thoroughway flooded multiple times a year.

No plans on the new line have been filed with the Department of Public Utilities, Rees said, although the company expects to do so by the end of the year. It is in a “design and engineering state” at the moment, she said.

Eversource is working with the Massachusetts Department of Transportation to nail down how long the construction will take and “how do you have the least impact on the communities where this is going.”

Which brings them to the open houses.

Representatives with the energy company will brief residents at two meetings this month — Next Wednesday (Oct. 10) at the St. Monica-St. Augustine church in South Boston from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. and Thurs., Oct. 11, at Carson Place in Dorchester, also from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Discussions at the meetings will be enhanced by graphics of the preferred route for the line and a possible secondary route. More info on the projected timeline will also be shared with the neighborhoods.

“All of that is what the open house is for,” Rees said. “We’re planning to get feedback as well and share the nuts and bolts of what it means to have a new transmission line. It’s good for the community if you have a robust electrical system and we need to make sure those communities are getting reliable, consistent service.”

Signal upgrades for Red, Orange lines on tap for early 2022

By Colin A. Young
STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

MBTA oversees gave a green light Monday to a $218 million contract for work to upgrade the train control signal systems on the Red and Orange lines, the final piece of work that T officials say is needed to improve service.

“This is replacing 1970s-based analog signal systems along the Orange Line and the Red Line,” said MBTA General Manager for Capital Delivery Betch Larkin, crews will work from north to south on each line. There will be 26 weekends with service diversions on the Red Line and 20 weekends of Orange Line service diversions to accommodate the work, she said.

There were men in positions of power who described those proceedings as a disgrace to our nation, when the real disgrace is a tolerant rape culture that has used rape and sexual violence as a tool of oppression, as a weapon of war,” she said, “and we have been complicit in our silence.”

For his part, Flake said he doesn’t want silence, he wants answers, noting that’s why he called for an FBI inquiry before the Senate takes its final vote on the nomination. President Trump acceded to Flake’s request, ordering the FBI to conduct a limited “supplemental investigation” into his high court nominee.

Walsh said he supported the protesters. “The people that are here today are passionate, there are a lot of survivors here, and it’s important for us to let the survivors know that we stand with them in their difficult times in their life where they felt no one stood with them. We need to stand with them today.”

Markey, a Democrat and the state’s senior senator, had said he would vote against Kavanaugh’s confirmation before the allegations of sexual misconduct came to light.

Said Jamaica Plain resident Gabi Morgan, a transgender woman and survivor of assault who was at the rally: “What scared me most about Kavanaugh is early on when he just made it sound like it was all Democrats attacking him. That worries me — that he would be impartial on the bench. When he used the term ‘What goes around, comes around,’ it sounded like a threat to me — to anybody who opposed him.”

A vote by the full Senate could happen as early as this week. With additional reporting from WBUR’s Benjamin Swasey.

In Boston, Flake hopes for ‘real investigation’ into Kavanaugh

BY MATT MURPHY

Arizona Sen. Jeff Flake, the Republican who has become a pivotal player in the volatile Supreme Court battle over Trump’s nominee Judge Brett Kavanaugh, told a crowd in Boston Monday that he wants a “real investigation” into sexual assault allegations against the judge.

“It does no good to have an investigation that just gives us more cover,” Flake said. “We actually need to find out what we can find out, and we have to realize that we may not be able to find out everything that happened.”

Flake was in Boston on Monday afternoon to speak at the Forbes Under 30 Summit. He was due later in the evening in Saint Anselm College in Manchester, N.H., to give another talk at the New Hampshire Institute of Politics.

The previously planned swing through New England, however, drew added attention after the retiring Arizona senator used his “leverage” on the Senate Judiciary Committee last Friday to force Republican leaders to agree to a one-week FBI probe into “current and credible allegations” against Kavanaugh.

Since then, reports about the White House limiting the scope of the FBI investigation appeared to have given rise to a new round of partisan bickering. President Donald Trump, during a press conference Monday, said he was open to doing whatever the Senate wanted, and Flake said he didn’t like “some of the defense” to be effective.

Flake addressed the hearing last Thursday where the Judiciary Committee heard testimony from Kavanaugh and Christine Blasey Ford, who has accused Kavanaugh of forcing himself on her at a high school party in 1982.

Flake said Ford offered “compelling, credible testimony,” but he also found Kavanaugh’s “impassioned, very raw defense” to be effective. He did say he didn’t like “some of the more partisan exchanges” and other members of the Senate have had during the Kavanaugh confirmation process that convinced him to do what he did next — force a week-long FBI investigation by threatening to vote against Kavanaugh.

“I had been troubled awhile. I felt that we weren’t doing due diligence with a lifetime appointment to the Supreme Court,” Flake said.

Before Flake spoke, Kerry was asked about the Kavanaugh hearings. “I felt very sad when I thought it was a bad moment in many different ways,” he said.

The former five-term senator from Massachusetts also called it “incomprehensible” that the Judiciary Committee had not sought to speak with Mark Judge, the friend of Kavanaugh’s who Ford identified as the only other witness to her assault.

“You don’t let that person disappear to the beach, with their clothes stacked in a car, and hide from process. You have to talk to everybody,” Kerry said, adding, “There is no reason in the world to be bum-rushing this nomination.”

Asked about another run for president in 2020, Kerry demurred: “The only thing that anyone should be talking about right now is the election in about 40 days.”

Flake, who has been mooting the partisan-ship of Washington and said Monday “could never warm to the president” because of the way Trump insulted his political opponents and contributed to the divisiveness in Washington, also got the 2020 question.

“I do hope somebody else runs in the Republican primary. I don’t see that happening in my case,” Flake said.
Update on the Adams St. library plan: Double the size, double the possibilities

(Continued from page 1) These changes were a revision of the original building design to ensure the protection of an oak tree that attendees of the first public meeting asked to be kept rooted in place on the library grounds.

“People seemed generally pleased,” said Shelton, who added that some questions arose about the construction job’s impact to the neighborhood and the nearby Thomas J. Kenny School. The city intends to rebuild the facility to LEED silver specifications, he said. (LEED stands for Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design, and silver status is second along a continuum of quality rating that runs from certified to silver to gold to platinum). Ideas for increasing the sustainability of the development are already under way, including a plan to retain the storm water generated on the site.

“In certain projects – or in typical projects – building or owners are required to keep all of the rainwater on site or collect it in large tanks on the site,” Shelton said. “We’ve introduced the concept where we basically have rain gardens. So instead of having a tank, there’s actually natural growth garden areas where the water will flow and eventually feed those areas.”

Grace Hebard, a nearby resident and a member of the Friends of the Adams Street Branch Library, noted at the meeting that the community was “very happy to see the new proposal. The initial plans that they had made at the previous meeting … it wasn’t really what we had hoped for,” she said. “Everybody strongly felt that a reading garden should be part of the new library. And although the initial plans did have some sort of outdoor space, it didn’t have what we considered the reading garden, and there was a large tree that we wanted to maintain, to keep on the property.

“So,” she added, “we felt very happy that the architects and the city came back with a proposal that … made those changes. I felt that they were really listening to the community. … They were meeting our requests the best they could and compromising on them in a reasonable way.”

The library branch is a polling location, and with construction expected to run through 2020, a presidential election year, the city said it’s ready to address its electoral function as the balloting grows near.

Boy Scouts to honor Jim Brett, head of the New England Council

Leadership and community service are hallmarks of the Boy Scouts tradition, and recognizing that, as Brett finds out, leaders is part of that history.

This year, the Boy Scouts of America Spirit of Adventure Council will honor New England Council President Jim Brett with its 2018 Good Scout and Philanthropist Award, which is named in honor of Ralph Lowell, founder of the WBGH Educational Foundation and one of Boston’s most prominent community leaders and philanthropists.

“I am humbled with this honor from the Scouts,” Brett said. “Encouraging leadership among young people is important to the future of life in the region. Equally important, he has been recognized many times for his work in public service as a former state representative as well as his commitment to volunteerism, and civic participation. Brett has devoted much of his public and private sector work to improving the quality of life for people with disabilities. He is nationally recognized for his work and was appointed for five terms to serve as a member of the President’s Committee for People with Intellectual Disabilities, twice by President George W. Bush and three terms by President Barack Obama. In 2016, Congress appointed Brett a member of the National Council on Disability. The award will be presented at the Salute to Scouting Gala on Nov. 9 at the Revere Hotel in Boston. For tickets or more information, contact Chuck Eaton at 617-272-3515 or chuck.eaton@scouting.org.

Three from Dot win Schatt awards

Three Dorchester residents—Leroy Ivey, Michelle Maffeo, and John P. Sullivan—were among those honored at Tuesday’s 2018 Schatt Awards at the Seaport Hotel. Hosted by the Municipal Research Bureau, the annual event singles out exemplary public employees from Boston.

Ivey, an outreach coordinator with the Bureau of Recovery Services’ AHOP program, dedicates himself to expanding overdose prevention services to Boston’s vulnerable residents. A gifted coordinator of care and patient advocacy, he led the way in helping Boston confront the unprecedented opioid epidemic presenting itself locally.

As president of The Metropolitan Sewer District encompassing the Boston system, the North Metropolitan Sewer District, the Charles River Valley Sewer District, and the South Metropolitan Sewer District. From the date of its construction in 1883 until the 1980s, the Columbia Point facility was the above ground symbol of an underground system of international renown.

In 1888 the report of the commissioners who were appointed to consider the annexation of Dorchester to Boston stated that one of the objectives of annexation was the construction of a tunnel and sewer from Stony Brook, a tributary of the Charles River, and a tunnel from Calf Pasture to a point in Dorchester.

By the mid-1880s, the two engines pumped an average daily flow of 62.5 million gallons of sewage per day. Each engine ran continuously throughout the day. Each engine produced approximately 10 billion gallons of sewage per year. Thus, the engines produced an average of just under 37 million gallons each day.

Leavitt Pumps were the world’s largest at the time. Their Fly wheels each weighed 72.5 tons and the Boston City Architect, the station was part of the first comprehensive sewerage project in Boston after the annexation of Dorchester in 1876. The station was initiated in 1875 and completed in 1884 after Boston had created a commission of civil engineers, headed by Elias S. Chubbuck, to report on the state of the sewage system in the city. The Commission’s report showed the immediate need for a new sanitation system and proposed a plan for the construction of the Main Drainage System, with consolidating the leading the south of the city to the Calf Pasture at Dorchester. The new system included the Calf Pasture Pumping Station Complex, and the Moon Island treatment facility.

Using gravity, the system allowed waste to travel from Boston neighborhoods on high ground to Columbia Point. The Calf Pasture station had massive pumps designed by Erasmus D. Leavitt that could pump up to 25 million gallons of sewage per day. By the mid-1880s, the two engines pumped an average of just under 37 million gallons each day.

The Boston Main Drainage System was the first extensive and successful sewerage project in the city’s history, and played a vital role in improving the public health in late 19th century Boston. The archive of these historical posts can be viewed on the blog at dorchesterhistorians.coop.
Toward exam school equity

A report published this week by researchers at Harvard’s JFK School of Government should prompt policy makers at all levels of government and the city of Boston—to think about the manner by which we enroll students into our exam schools.

The report, commissioned by the Metro Mayors Coalition, is titled “Increasing Diversity in Boston’s Exam Schools” and examines the racial gap that exists between the city’s school-age population and enrollment in the city’s exam schools.

Black and Latino students make up 75 percent of the student body in the Boston public school system, but there is a huge racial disparity at the exam schools, especially the Boston Latin School, where just 25 percent of the incoming (7th grade) student body are black or Latino.

The report states that three-quarters of all black and Latino students make up just 75 percent of the student body in the Boston public school system, but there is a huge racial disparity at the exam schools, especially the Boston Latin School, where just 25 percent of the incoming (7th grade) student body are black or Latino.

As Warren is taking a ‘hard look’ at running for president, could her anti-corruption campaign get her to the White House?

BY ANTHONY BROOKS  WBUR REPORTER

At a town hall meeting on Saturday in Holyoke, Sen. Elizabeth Warren moved a step closer to becoming a presidential candidate in 2020.

“After Nov. 6, I will take a hard look at running for president,” Warren announced to a room full of cheering supporters.

Warren has done a lot to fuel speculation that she’s preparing to run for president. She’s raising a lot of money and campaigns frequently across the country for fellow Democrats, raising her profile. The senator, not a part-time author, part-time senator and part-time presidential candidate,” Diehl told WBUR. “If she really cares about the White House, she should make that a full-time effort and drop out of this Senate race.”

That’s not likely. Warren is expected to easily beat Diehl. A recent WBUR poll showed Warren leading her Republican challenger by 26 points. Independent Shiva Ayyadurai trailed 25 points behind Diehl.

But a recent Suffolk University/Boston Globe poll found that 58 percent of Massachusetts voters say she should not run for president. Warren may be popular enough to win a second term in the Senate, but voters also recognize that running for president would be a lot more complicated.

This segment aired on October 1 on WBUR 90.9FM, Boston’s NPR News Station. The Reporter and WBUR have a partnership in which the news organizations share stories and resources.

Bellotti to step down as sheriff to lead Quincy College

By Matt Murphy  STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti will retire at the end of this year, he’s held for nearly two decades to become the next president of Quincy College, a municipally affiliated two-year school looking to rebond after its nursing program was shut down by the state last year.

Quincy Mayor Thomas Koch, who has been the acting president of the college since May, says Bellotti will be the board of governors on Wednesday night to serve as president for the next 18 months. The recommendation was accepted, Bellotti told the News Service.

The college will also launch a search to find the next permanent head of the school. Bellotti’s decision to step down as sheriff in Norfolk County comes after more than 19 years at the helm of the office that oversees the jails and inmate programs in Norfolk County and on the South Shore.

Bellotti worked during his tenure to develop an inmate re-entry program focused on helping those successfuly reintegrate into the community after serving time.

Prior to becoming sheriff, Bellotti served as a state representative from Quincy. According to sources in the city, Bellotti had grown restless in the sheriff’s job and was looking for a new opportunity.

A Boston Pops’ concert in Franklin Park on Sunday, September 30 drew approximately 8,000 people together on a beautiful sunny day for an afternoon full of music and fun. The day began with a pre-concert festival featuring community groups such as the Franklin Park Zoo, Franklin Park Coalition, Boston Children’s Museum, Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra, and more. A second stage hosted a variety of activities, including West African dance music from Kotoko Brass and audiences enjoyed Cuban fusion music from Clive and Blues. Led by Keith Lockhart in the first half, the Boston Pops performed the music of Leonard Bernstein, including music from West Side Story, Mass, and On the Town. In the second half, the Pops were led by BSO Youth and Family Concerts conductor Thomas Wilkins through the music of Duke Ellington, a collaboration with drumming group Grooversity, and a tribute to Aretha Franklin featuring soloist Gabrielle Goodman and the Boston Pops Gospel Choir.

We’re on a mission to break down barriers and provide the personalized care you deserve right here in your community. That’s why we were named a Leapfrog Top Hospital for quality and safety—one of only 34 in the nation—for the past 3 out of 4 years. Carney Hospital, part of the fabric of Dorchester.
Owners pitch revised plan for Uphams Corner pot shop

In our work home, we both spend more time here than we do at our own houses and we enjoy this community very much,” said Atzeni. We would have chosen the notion of Uphams Corner as a place both historically ignored and, on the verge of transformation with a city revitalization project under way in the area. They said that a pot shop would perpetuate a drug problem and simultaneously contribute to raising rents and property values that would displace residents.

“We’re not trying to create an environment where the people of this area are changed,” Virga said. “We want people in this area to be in this area. We want this area to improve, and we think the business can help.”

His remarks were cut off by a swell of scoffs.

The loud stridency of the plan’s opponents drowned out the voices in support of Virga and the shop, like 35-year-old Nancy Virga, whose comments were met with jeers and sarcastic shouts as loud that the city moderator felt a need to repeatedly remind attendees to be respectful.

“Imagine a bank, times 10,” said Cataloni. “At least, I’m hearing something to consider. Sounds to Curd like the future. The project permit cannabis cafes in the city of Boston to do this, no consumption component to the shop, even if the law did change to permit cannabis cafes in the future. The project sounds to Curd like something to consider.

The president of the Jones Hill civic group, Bridget Curd, did not even see the point of trying to speak up. “It was painful, I just think it went to a certain level,” she told the Reporter on Tuesday. “I think we could have calmly had open conversations and heard a little bit more about what the vision was as opposed to accusing him of... she trailed off. "There was blood," she said. “It was the opposite of the planning meeting we had where I had a clearer vision of what was happening in the community. Virga is proposing what he described as something akin to a craft beer and wine shop: Customers know what they want, what specific strains of cannabis, and they are willing to pay more for the regulated product, enjoy it recreationally, and are not going to be consuming it nearby. He was clear on Tuesday that there would be no consumption compo-

“A Taste of Opera’ at Caffe Zia Gianna will benefit Dot’s Boston City Singers

This Sunday at 6 p.m. the night will give residents of all ages the opportunity to hear a classically trained vocalist, learn about opera as an art form, and gain insights into the historical context of the Rossini masterpiece, which will be performed at the Boston Lyric Opera from October 12 through October 21. Savin Hill’s Peter McNamara, president of the New England Opera Club, says he came up with the idea for “A Taste of Opera” as a way to support a children’s music program, a local restaurant, and the local opera scene, all at the same time.

“People don’t realize how many people involved in the opera community are here in Dorchester,” he said. “When I go to an event concerning opera I always see people from Dorchester.”

The event, part of the “Opera Talk Italy” series that regularly takes place in Watertown, aims to help newcomers or seasoned veterans of opera gain a deeper appreciation of the opera artform.

“When we started 28 years ago, our mission was to educate people with opera,” said McNamara. “Since I’ve become president I’ve tweaked it to wanting to deal with children. The Boston City Singers have an incredible children’s program. I went to one of their rehearsals and it was really impressive. Besides teaching them voice, they’re also teaching them social values.”

Boston City Singers Managing Director Melissa Graham expressed excitement about the potential partnership between her nonprofit and the New England Opera Club. “Peter reached out to us because our opera kids program is right in sync with their New England Opera Club,” she said. “We were delighted to hear that a portion of the proceeds were going to benefit us.”

The $50 ticket price includes a four-course Italian meal, tenor Bozon’s performance, and a pre-opera discussion. Beverages and a selection of wines will be available for purchase. To make reservations, call 617-436-2368. For more information, contact Peter McNamara at neoperachub@gmail.com, or the restaurant at info@ziagianna.com.

What if the Dot Park goats could stay for a while longer?

BY MAUREEN FORSY-SORBELL  REPORTER STAFF

Have you taken your families to Dot Park to meet the Goats-In-Residence yet? If not, you should! These hungry beasts are busy munching on excess vegetation like poison ivy and other invasive plant species. They're cute, too.

KIDS MENU

In an effort to make these hoofed guests a more permanent presence (they are supposed to end their residency on Oct. 15) the Dorchester Park Association is accepting donations to assist with costs.

Go to gofundme.com/5yOmt08. Any little bit will help, though if everyone donated just $10 that would guarantee the goats would have a home with us for a few years.

The association has also commissioned a beloved artist Janet Harrold (of trolley-painting fame) to create goats-themed Christmas ornaments that will go on sale at Cedar Grove Gardens this month. Ornaments will retail for $9.95 each and proceeds will go directly to the goats! Stop by Dot or Cedar Grove Gardens this month.  Ornaments will be accepting donations to assist with costs.

Pets are Family – When Disaster Strikes be Prepared

The devastation left in the wake of Hurricane Florence in the Carolinas is a grim reminder that coastal New England is ripe for a similar type of storm. As these weather events continue to grow in severity and frequency, if you don’t have a disaster plan in place, the time to develop one is now.

If an emergency occurs, you may not have the time to gather your pets, supplies, and important documents. Assemble a pet emergency kit now so you can be ready when needed.

A Moment of Paws

September is Disaster Preparedness Month in Massachusetts, and the Animal Rescue League of Boston wants to remind you that when creating a plan – do not forget to include your family pets!

Start with a sturdy and comfortable crate with bedding, disposable litter boxes with litter for cats, and then make your pet’s go-bag (which should be easily accessible) with the following:

- Portable food and water dishes
- Manual opener and utensils
- Trash bags, wipes and other sanitary needs
- Pet first-aid kit
- Collar with ID tags
- Extra leashes
- Grooming supplies
- Medications and medical records in a waterproof bag
- Toys and treats
- Updated photo of your pet in case of separation
- Environment protection: Frequent cleaning and washing of pets, toys, feeding bowls, and other supplies. Frequent hand washing.

Remember – when you go they go!

BOYS & GIRLS CLUBS OF DORCHESTER

CONNECT THE DOT:
BGCD Host’s Duxbury Beach Party: Thank you to everyone who came out to support Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester at the Duxbury Beach Party fundraiser this weekend! Everyone had a blast listening to U2 cover band, The Joshua Tree and learning more about all of the great things constantly happening here at the Club.

We are especially appreciative of Tom and Jen Weldon for making this event possible along with the night’s many sponsors Duxbury Dragons Football & Cheerleading, PortSide Real Estate, Powder Point Oysters, McGee Pre-Owned Superstore, Duxbury Insurance Group, Tito’s Handmade Vodka, JB Robbie Builders Inc., Lee Kennedy and Boston Capital Wealth Management of Raymond James. To learn more about different ways you can get involved and help to support the Club, please visit www.bgcdorchester.org.

FIND OUT WHAT’S INSIDE:
College Fellows October Schedule: There are so many great opportunities with our College Fellows program this coming month! High school freshman and sophomores will have the chance to create a map of goals for the next ten years and brainstorm how to reach those goals on October 10th. A college consultant will be available to juniors to answer questions on how to prepare for senior year on October 9th.

There will also be a FAFSA workshop open to all high school students and parents taking place on October 10th along with office hour nights where students can receive one on one guidance from American Student Assistance on both October 16th and October 30th from 5PM to 7PM.

Email Tricia at pchapple@bgcdorchester.org to take advantage of these incredible resources!

DID YOU KNOW
L.I.F.T is Seeking Families for Parenting Journey Program: The L.I.F.T program at BGCD is seeking families to help create a diverse group of mothers, fathers, grandparents and caregivers for a new group who will focus on increasing confidence, capability, and resiliency as individuals and as parents. Those involved will meet every Tuesday once a week for nine weeks. By reflecting on your own childhood, you will be able to choose what kind of parent you want to be, make positive changes, grow and create your own style of parenting - one that reflects your personal vision and values.

The program features activities, engaging group participation, a family style meal and childcare. Space is limited and registration is required by October 18, 2018. Please contact Rosa Beriguete at (617) 288-7120 or at rberiguete@bgcdorchester.org to register.

Expanding the bike share program to under-served neighborhoods has been one of the primary goals of Blue Cross Blue Shield since the company began sponsoring the bike company began serving neighborhoods one of them.

Community feedback was an important part of the planning process for the new stations, added Fiandaca, recalling the neighborhood meetings and surveys that helped the city determine which locations residents felt would be good fits for the new Bluebikes stations. Mattapan Square was one of them.

Questions surrounding ridership and projections of low bike usage in the neighborhood had been raised for years by Hubway as an argument against expansion, said Cullinane, a stance that he perceived to be negative. “They were saying that before the path was finished and before the bikes were put in. I just really think it’s incomplete to say ridership is low in a place where you haven’t yet put the bikes and the path. Now we have a brand new $20 million bike path that allows people to utilize the bikes, right in the perfect location.”

Cullinane acknowledged the work done by community advocates like Vivian Ortiz of the Fitness Coalition and Mattapan Food and Nutrition Initiative over the last several years made it clear that right here in the community we have folks that choose to ride their bikes,” he said.

The ceremony concluded with the unveiling of a custom Mattapan-themed bicycle designed by a small team from the South Boston-based organization Artists for Humanity, which connects under-resourced teens with apprenticeships and paid jobs in various creative fields. Armani Thomas, 17, was one of the graphic designers on the team that created the custom bike. He drew by hand the design on the bike, which features a collage of what he referred to as the community’s “assets” — uniquely Mattapan things like the trolley and the pair of statues that mark the gateway to Blue Hill Avenue in Mattapan Square. “It’s meant to represent the entire community,” he said.

The head designer on the project, 21-year-old Jonathan “Pineapple” Tejeda, spoke to the research that he and his team undertook to home in on an accurate and representative portrait of the neighborhood. “We knew we were designing a bike for Mattapan, so we wanted to, you know, hear from the people of Mattapan, the people who live here, the people who have family here,” he said. After the unveiling, the design team, community members, and city councillors took turns riding the new bike, which is proudly adorned with a “Welcome to Mattapan” sign on its handlebars. “It perfectly fits Mattapan,” said Tejeda.
