House takes up the 'strong step' criminal reform bill OK'd by Senate

By JENNIFER SMITH
NEWS EDITOR

The criminal justice reform bill that the Massachusetts Senate passed last Friday, a move that advocates called a "strong step" toward improving a system that disproportionately impacts communities of color, is now in the hands of the House. Lawmakers hope to see its version of the bill passed in the next two weeks so they can begin the work of hashing out a compromise bill to send to Gov. Charlie Baker's desk.

The sweeping Senate bill would eliminate mandatory minimum sentences for low-level drug offenses, refine the bail system to set lower court fees and fines for lower-income defendants, raise the age for adult prosecution from 18 to 19 years old, reform conditions in solitary confinement, raise the youngest age of juvenile court jurisdiction from 7 to 12 years old, and alter statutory rape laws to separate out cases involving teenagers.

After hours of debate on amendments, senators voted 27-10 to approve the measure, with four Democrats joining the six Republicans in opposing the final version.

Nine of Massachusetts's eleven district attorneys, including Suffolk County's Daniel Conley, had sent a searing letter to Senate leadership opposing several of the bill's provisions before its passage. "One of our concerns, quite candidly," they wrote, "is the vised live, by WGBH, and have been out hitting the doors, forums and town halls, and neighborhood events as they make their final pitches to the electorate. They have expressed clear differences on planning for Boston's growing population at a time of limited housing, as well as the best route forward to manage the public schools.

Immigrants a focus at Irish Honors event

By DANIEL SHEEHAN

The Boston Irish Reporter hosted its eighth annual Boston Irish Honors luncheon on Oct. 26 at the Seaport Hotel. The event drew some 400 guests who helped to honor Boston Globe columnist Kevin Cullen, former state highway commissioner and Boston mayoral advisor Tom Tinlin, and a Dorchester and South Boston family dedicated to serving their community: Annmarie, Nora, and Bill Kennedy.

The event was book-ended by passionate

Boston Mayor Martin J. Walsh offered opening remarks at the Boston Irish Honors luncheon, saying in part: "Those of us that are Irish-Americans must be on the front lines to continue to fight and welcome immigrants — to protect them from persecution, and protect them from hate."

 New director hired to lead VietAID

The Vietnamese American Initiative for Development (VietAID) in Fields Corner will welcome a new executive director in January. Lisette Le, a Dorchester resident, has worked most recently as the Director of the Massachusetts Voter Table in Boston. She has also worked as an organizer with Right to the City and the Chinese Progressive Association.

VietAID was founded in 1994. In 2002, it opened the Vietnamese Community Center at 42 Charles Street.

“VietAID is an anchor organization for both Vietnamese American and Fields Corner communities,” Le said in a statement. “Over the past 23 years, VietAID has made significant impact in the community: developing affordable housing to the Fields Corner and Four Corner neighborhoods, launching the first bilingual Vietnamese daycare, creating a home for Vietnamese community

Two charged in rash of bank robberies

An alleged serial bank robber dubbed the Rte. 128 Bandit for his preference for robbing banks not far from the highway was arrested in Dorchester last Tuesday, along with his girlfriend, an alleged accomplice.

Paul Landrum, 48, was charged with eight armed robberies and two attempted armed robberies, police say. Tamea Chambers, 36, is charged with two bank robberies.

According to Boston Police, the break in the case came when “detectives assigned to the Bank Robbery Task Force received information that a vehicle matching the description of a possible suspect vehicle was found, parked and unoccupied, in the area of Perth and Fayston Streets” in Dorchester.

Detectives followed the vehicle to a nearby store and, with the assistance of additional officers from District B-2, approached and apprehended the suspects. Both were taken into custody without incident, according to the BPD report.

Crowdfunding begins on Sunday for upgrades at Peabody Square

Greater Ashmont Main Street will begin crowdfunding for projects enhancing the Peabody Square plazas near the Ashmont T station this coming Sunday evening with a launch at a local home. The group is seeking $25,000 in donations to qualify for matching grants.

Greater Ashmont pitched new planters, a potential water feature, updated seating, and other tweaks to the open plazas around Peabody Square and the Ashmont Grill in a June 2016 presentation. At the time, they also secured initial funding for the Peabody Square Reinvestment project.

The civic association was awarded an Impact and Innovation Grant by the Boston Main Streets Foundation, with additional funding from the MassDevelopment Commonwealth Fund and project fundraising support from Patronicity last Friday. If the group achieves its fundraising goal by the time the campaign ends in December, MassDevelopment’s Commonwealth Fund will match the donations and an additional $10,000 will be contributed by the Boston Main Streets Foundation.

This would leave Greater Ashmont with $60,000 to use on the beautification project.

“This is a tremendous opportunity to continue and expand the improvements that were made to Peabody Square over 10 years ago with the renovation of the Ashmont T station,” Greater Ashmont Main Street Executive Director Jenn Cartee said in a statement. “We’re immensely grateful to city partners, neighbors, and others who have come together for a community-led design process to create a space that is inviting to all our Dorchester neighbors.”

The Dorchester Brewing Company will host a closing event for the campaign in December.

Man shot near Mattapan Square, makes way to T station on foot

A 20-year-old man Dorchester man was shot Tuesday night in Milton on Blue Hills Parkway, police said. State Police said the victim remains at Boston Medical Center and is expected to survive. The shooting likely occurred in the area of 100 Blue Hill Parkway, State Police said, and the victim made his way on foot to the Mattapan MBTA station.

“The investigation suggests that the victim was shot after he and the group of young men with him got into an altercation with another group of men,” State Police said in a statement. “After the shooting, the assailant group fled on foot toward Brook Road in Milton.”

Officers responded to the area of 500 River St. — just north of the Neponset River and near the Mattapan T station — at about 9:50 p.m. where they found the victim with non life-threatening injuries from gunshot wounds.

Former EPA administrator Gina McCarthy, OFD, urges action on climate change

BY BERNADETTE DARCY
REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

Former Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Gina McCarthy, a Dorchester native, was the featured speaker on Tuesday at a UMass Boston event that focused on climate change and clean energy. The panel discussion — “Clean Energy is Today’s Moon Shot” — also featured Emily Reichert, the CEO of Greentown Labs, and David Cash, dean of UMass Boston’s McCormack Graduate School of Policy and Global Study.

The discussion drew parallels between President Kennedy’s call to pioneer space travel and the current debate about fighting climate change. It focused on the nature of clean energy benefits and the campaign that will be required to pursue them successfully.

The event kicked off with a screening of John F. Kennedy’s “Moon Speech,” delivered in 1962 at Rice University.

“We choose to go to the moon in this decade and do the other things, not because they are easy, but because they are hard, because that goal will serve to organize and measure the best of our energies and skills, because that challenge is one that we are willing to accept, one we are unwilling to postpone, and one we intend to win,” Kennedy said.

JFK’s words were the cornerstone for the afternoon’s discussion. His grandson, Jack Schlossberg, introduced the session by reflecting on his grandfather’s words.

“The lesson of that speech is really an important one when thinking of environmental issues,” Schlossberg said. “The basic message is that challenges are opportunities. We are lucky to be the generation that has the chance to solve the hardest problem of all time.”

McCarthy, who served as the EPA chief under President Obama from 2013 under last year, is a 1976 graduate of UMass Boston who gave the university’s commencement address in 2015. She served as an advisor to several Massachusetts governors before taking charge as Connecticut’s top environmental commissioner.

Climate scientists — as many as 97 percent of them, according to some reports — agree that climate change is primarily influenced by human activity. However, only half of Americans believe that climate change is a real threat to the US. And the Trump administration intends to repeal the Clean Power Plan enacted by the Obama administration, which was passed as a way to combat climate change.

That’s a mistake, McCarthy said. She argues that there is “absolute clarity” that climate change is real and must be met with immediate action.

Pollution of the atmosphere via excessive greenhouse gas emissions has resulted not only in an abnormal rise in temperature, she noted, but also in a variety of extreme weather events, including hurricanes, flooding, and devastating forest fires.

“The most important thing is now we do have inexpensive renewables that actually compete in the market against fossil energy — in particular, against coal,” McCarthy said.

“One of the major mistakes we’ve made on climate change is that early on the environmental community posed it as a [non-human] issue...representing it with the visual of polar bears,” McCarthy said. “We have not been able to get rid of that as the visual. It’s really not about polar bears. It’s about our kids.”

“[Climate change] is personal because it is the greatest public health challenge we face,” she added. “It’s going to exacerbate all of the challenges of us living safely right here on this coastline.”

As the director of Greentown Labs — the largest clean energy technology incubator in the nation — Reichert works with scientists, engineers, and entrepreneurs to support the development of green technology that combats climate change. Greentown seeks to reduce carbon emissions by promoting renewable and clean energy options that reduce environmental waste and pollution in the atmosphere.

Reichert believes that for the technology to truly be received by communities, their members need to clearly comprehend the issues at hand and understand the ways in which climate change affects them.

“Why is it that people don’t do something or that they don’t want to believe that climate change is somehow affecting them?” Reichert asked. “I think it’s just often not top of mind for people, unfortunately.”

Mixed-use project on Hancock St. earns support from the neighbors

BY JENNIFER SMITH
NEWS EDITOR

A proposed five-story mixed-use building on the slope of Jones Hill received predominantly positive reviews in public comments submitted to the city this fall. The 233 Hancock St. project approved by the Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) in October would bring 36 rental units and street-front gallery and retail space to a corner now occupied by auto shops.

In another endorsement of the development, the Meetinghouse Hill and Hancock Street civic associations both voted in support of the proposal.

Out of more than 70 comments submitted to the BPDA, some 60 neighbors, abutters, and nearby business owners said the project would bring needed investment in the area and contribute new workforce housing.

"To reiterate a point that has been stated many times, the current dilapidated property has been blighted for a generation, and it is to their great credit that the developers are hoping to turn this corner of our neighborhood around," wrote Jonathan Lashley of Meetinghouse Hill Civic.

Along with the 36 residential rental units, the project would include 700 square feet of ground-floor retail space, 400 square feet of ground-floor gallery space, and 22 accessory off-street parking spaces in the building's garage, which is accessible from Hancock Street. About 38 bicycles can be stored in a designated ground-floor area.

A rendering depicts a five-story mixed-use building that would rise at 233 Hancock St. under a plan approved by the Boston Planning and Development Agency (BPDA) in October.

Those opposed — nine comments in total — primarily objected to the project's density, size, and number of parking spaces.

"The size of the building and the architectural design do not fit into this neighborhood,” wrote abutter Charles Hulme, who was also distressed by new building designs across Dorchester that he considers too modern or blocky. “If the proposed design of 233 Hancock St. is approved, it will totally block any cool sea breeze that I have enjoyed for my whole life,” he wrote. “It will also effect [sic] the amount of sunlight and privacy that I am accustomed to. Is this the future of Dorchester, to build tall, square buildings with very little architectural appeal? I hope not."

Five units are designated as affordable units for households earning between 80 percent and 120 percent of the area median income, or about $50,000 to $100,000 in annual income.

Janet Jones of the Dorchester/Roxbury Labor Committee called the project "ill-conceived and in no way provides for the needs of our neighborhood.” She said the area needs more “stable housing with many more affordable housing units.”

Commenters were split on the amount of parking that would be adequate. Some said there should be a one-to-one ratio while others noted there were often available spots along the stretch and the site is near enough walk to the Savin Hill or Fields

Corner T stations.

"I commend the development team for their willingness to bring change to the area," wrote Vivian Girard, who owns the homestead bakery and cafe with his wife. "Although I would favor more housing — especially more affordable units — and less parking, the building as it was presented appears of the proper scale and purpose for that street."

Uphams Corner’s Fairmount Lab gets $85k state grant

(Continued from page 1) neurial activity, and job creation by assisting in the development of collaborative infrastructure. The program “is very much a product of collaboration,” said Lauren Liss, president and chief executive officer of the Massachusetts Development Finance Agency. “It involved taking a fabulous idea, incubating that idea, and collaborating amongst a group of stakeholders in order to implement that idea.”

In part, the collaborative program is funded by legislation that supports the revitalization, growth, and prosperity of communities throughout Massachusetts. In addition to that funding, the Barr Foundation, a private, Boston-based foundation that supports arts, creativity, climate, and education programs, donated $645,000 to the program, the first installment of a three-year, $1,965,000 grant to expand support for arts-related collaborative workspaces.

“There is a spirit of innovation and entrepreneurship that exists in every community,” Ash said. “We want innovators and entrepreneurs to come out of isolationism, to see others, to share resources, to talk about strategies, to push each other, maybe sometimes to cry with each other.”

The Fairmount Innovation Lab is a creative incubator geared toward elevating, launching, and growing projects within the Fairmount Cultural Corridor. Collaborators who work in the lab draw upon local cultural assets and ethnic traditions along the commuter rail line, supporting vibrant neighborhoods and a sustainable creative economy.

The cornerstone of the Fairmount Lab is its Launchpad Program, an intensive 12-week educational training session for creative or social entrepreneurs. The Launchpad helps participants translate creative ideas into business endeavors. Participants attend weekly presentations, participate in peer-to-peer learning, and work within a community of entrepreneurs, in the process gaining competency in market research, pricing, sales, marketing, branding, finances, and delivering ideas.

“In the two years that we’ve had the Launchpad, 57 entrepreneurs and artists have come through this program, 95 percent of them minority, 75 percent of them women,” said Liora Beer, director of the Fairmount Innovation Lab. “Seventeen creative and social enterprises were created.”

Fontaine’s Spring/Summer 2018 Lotus Collection was shown last month at London Fashion Week, where it was acquired by a New York-based clothing boutique.

“The collection philosophy represents the lotus flower and its audacity to grow in unfavorable environments,” Fontaine writes of her collection on her website. “It illustrates a woman’s tenacity to be strong, resilient, and powerful in the midst of adversity.”

In addition to the Fairmount Lab, two other Boston-based organizations were awarded grants. Nuestra Comunidad Development Corporation received $25,000 to develop the Bartlett Station Food Incubator—a 2,000-square-foot food retail space within a mixed-use building under construction in Roxbury’s Dudley Square. The Food Incubator will help address the neighborhood’s need to connect small businesses to affordable spaces and networked support.

The Fort Point Arts Community in Boston was awarded $151,000 to create the FPAC Space, a collaborative arts incubator and venue for film, media, music, fine art, dance, poetry, and craft programming.

“I want to congratulate each and every one of the grant recipients,” Liss said. “Now, the program really is a working, effective collaboration of all of our partners.”

Vote for Michael Flaherty on Tuesday, November 7th!

#3 on the Ballot for Boston City Councilor At-Large

As your Boston City Councilor At-Large:

- I have supported a property tax deferral program for seniors and longtime homeowners in the city.
- I have been a lead advocate for the Community Preservation Act - acknowledging the need for greater support for affordable housing, preservation of green spaces and historic sites, and building up neighborhood business districts across Boston.
- I have called for expanding police presence and community partnerships in all of our neighborhoods to protect our children from drugs, gangs, and violence.
- I have fought hard to strengthen Boston's public education pipeline by expanding early education opportunities, putting more advanced work programs in more of our schools, and improving transition from high school to college.

On Tuesday, November 7th, I respectfully request your vote.

Electric guitar joins up with a cello in third event of Dot Jazz Series

All Saints to host duo on on Nov. 9

By DANIEL SHEEHAN
REPORTER CORRESPONDENT

Elis Roseira and Catherine Bent are two halves of a rather unconventional musical duo: Elis sings and plays electric guitar, while Catherine plays cello. The two instruments don't seem particularly compatible, but the pair, who first met in Boston at the Berklee School of Music, say their chemistry with each other was instant.

"I was really struck because I've never had this connection with a musician before," says Elis. "We have a very deep understanding in terms of what each other is thinking." This understanding is evident in their effortless, free-flowing playing, which features syncopated guitar, alternating bowed and plucked cello, and buoyant melodic lines sung by Roseira in Portuguese.

There is a lot going on musically, with Elis and Catherine constantly shifting roles and trading musical phrases; at the same time there is a ongoing balance to the performance.

The duo will be performing in Peabody Hall at the Parish of All Saints next Thursday, (Nov. 9) at 7 p.m., in the third installment of the Dot Jazz Series presented by Mandorla Music.

While Roseira's and Bent's music draws on classical, jazz, and a number of Brazilian styles, including bossa and samba, much of what they play is based in choro, a traditional Brazilian musical genre from the late 19th century that resulted from a mixing of cultures in Brazil. "It's kind of analogous to ragtime in that it is the child of European dance music – 19th century polka especially – and

West African rhythms from the very large slave population in Brazil," said Bent, noting that in this way, choro reflects the cultural diversity that makes up the social fabric of Brazil. Musically, she says, it provides a perfect balance for her interests and skill sets. "My background was in classical music, and then I did a degree in jazz, so I kind of have both of these influences. I found a very happy home in choro music because composition is very important, but there's also room for improvisation and freedom."

Having completed tours in Europe and around the country, Roseira and Bent are used to playing to a wide range of audiences and they hope their show in Dorchester will attract both those familiar with and those new to Brazilian music.

Bent credits series curator Mark Redmond for expanding his vision and his "labor of love" to a wider range of listeners. "He brings artists and audiences together who might not otherwise find one another," she says. "We're grateful to him and the Greater Ashmont Main Street organization, and we're excited to play at the All Saints Church. It's a beautiful space with lovely sound and a great atmosphere."

Roseira and Bent will be playing traditional and original tunes from their first album, Um Gosto de Sol (A Taste of Sun). Tickets for the event are available at mandorlamusic.net. The $15 cover includes dessert and non-alcoholic drinks. Wine will also be available.

Dot, Mattapan students awarded Lynch scholarships

Nineteen students from Saint John Paul II Catholic Academy's four campuses were named Peter Lynch Scholars this month. The scholarships were awarded during a Mass celebrated in Newton.

Each Catholic elementary school selects its scholars based upon, among other criteria, grades, work ethic, and demonstrated care and concern for others in the school community and beyond.

This year's Dorchester contingent included Marianna Castro, Stefany Contreras, Chlory Lamerique, Jovani Maestre from the Columbia campus; Jason Beauvais, Lawrence Gustama, Jadlie Lamartiniere, Daniela Lopez, Jamae Richards from the Lower Mills campus; Falone Bertrand, Michael Brice, Sariah George, Karl Jean-Baptiste, Schaynalgee Souffrant from the Mattapan campus and Aaron Collier, Saidah DaSilva, Elizabeth DeLorenzo, Angie Edouard, Anthony Martindale from Neponset.

Lynch, known for his successful career as a money manager at Fidelity Investments, is a longtime supporter of Boston's Catholic Schools and serves as chairman emeritus for the Catholic Schools Foundation.

Dorchester's Benedicte S. Pierre Louis, 10, will perform in the Urban Nutcracker from December 15-28 at John Hancock Hall. Benedicte, who attends Mother Caroline Academy, has been dancing with Tony Williams Dance Company for seven years and this season will dance the roles of Tap City, Prologue Tap dance battle and Marzipan also known as Rox(bury) Riff. This is Benedicte's third year in the Urban Nutcracker and she has been dancing since she was three years old. "This is my favorite way to spend Benedicte S. Pierre Louis time with my friend. I dance almost every day at home, at school, or at Tony Williams Dance Center, but Urban Nutcracker lets me put what I know into motion," she said.

Dorchester resident Brian Bakofen portrays Olin Britt in The Footlight Club's upcoming production of The Music Man. Bakofen — who also serves as a trustee of the club — has been a cast member for about seven years. Brian also played the exact same role in his high school's production of The Music Man. The eight-show production, directed by Vincent Ratsavong, opens November 4 at the club's venue on Eliot Street in Jamaica Plain.

DORCHESTER HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Darius Eddy founded the Eddy's Refrigerator Manufactory Co. in 1847. After his death in the mid-1890s, the firm was left in the hands of his sons: Darius, Lewis, Isaac H., and George. They later took in their uncle, J. Lodge Eddy, and by 1898 the firm is listed in the Boston Directory as D. Eddy & Sons (D.F., Lewis, Isaac H., George and J. Lodge), refrigerator manufacturers at 336 Adams Street at the corner of Gibson Street.

This week's illustration shows the manufacturing plant at the top and the Dorchester Historical Society's Eddy Refrigerator at the bottom, a wooden chest with metal lining. There was a compartment to hold ice with a drain pipe for the melted water and another compartment for the storage of food.

In 1876, the Boston Daily Globe published a puff piece. "In the year 1847, Mr. D. Eddy, who is the oldest ice-chest manufacturer in this country, began the manufacture of ice-chests, as they were then called, in Boston, and in 1852 he removed to Dorchester, and since that time the manufacture under Mr. Eddy's supervision has grown to mammoth proportions, and the improvements constantly added to the refrigerators ... have made them the standard style throughout the United States, as well as in many foreign countries. ...

The best possible evidence for their freedom from moisture is found in the fact that matches can be kept in them for any length of time and ignite as readily as those kept in tin."

The company manufactured many designs, including a modest model that looked like a small freezer chest and very elaborate chests with separate compartments for wine storage.

On Feb. 19, 1908, the Daily Globe printed a report of a fire of suspicious origin at the plant. "The fire started about 6 o'clock and was discovered by Samuel D. Averill, a conductor on an Ashmont and Milton car, who, as he was passing along Dorchester Ave, saw smoke issuing from the warehouse on Gibson st, near the avenue. He rang in the alarm from Box 993 at the Fields Corner car stables, and before the apparatus arrived the whole warehouse was a mass of flames. ... The next day the Globe reported that a fireman who answered the alarm had found a broken window, and the fire department suspected a firebug.

The company never embraced electricity, and their ice boxes soon were overshadowed by electric refrigerators that did not require the constant delivery of ice to the home.

Port Norfolk plan needs a re-write

It's rare to find any project that generates near unanimity among civic leaders. But that's the dynamic right now in the Port Norfolk section of Dorchester, where neighbors have spoken up forcefully against a proposed redevelopment proposal that would create a new complex of condos, hotel rooms, boat slips and other amenities on the waterfront.

We hope that the development team and city officials, particularly at the Boston Planning and Development Agency, will heed the legitimate concerns of the community in this instance and revise and scale back the current plans.

There are merits to the proposal, dubbed Neponset Wharf by the proponents at City Point Capital, which has engaged a well-respected architectural firm, RODE, to design the space, which is next to the existing Venezia restaurant. The project would rise from what is now a non-descript collection of warehouses and marine equipment. In our view, the design looks great. And we love the idea of reenergizing the four acres of watersheet with a boathouse, open space and commercial space. Our neighborhood is thirsty for more public amenities along our waterfront and with enhanced connections to the south along the Neponset Greenway, there's great potential here for people to safely walk and bicycle into the Port now.

Reasonable people understand that this prime waterfront can and should be redeveloped. It is not a private enclave. It's a part of Dorchester and Boston that can be enhanced with sensible growth that will include new housing.

But opponents — including residents near the site and environmental organizations that are familiar with the peninsula and the contiguous waterfront area, have raised legitimate concerns — and not just about more traffic. They range from insufficient access for emergency vehicles and existing flooding and sewage issues to the potential impacts to wildlife.

Our sense is that a revised proposal — with better input from neighborhood leaders — could produce an improved proposal, one that would include a still-sizable footprint for new residents and amenities that would enhance the public's use of the Dorchester waterfront.

The BPDA — under the direction, ultimately, of Mayor Walsh — is the key player at this juncture. They can and should insist that the development team reconsider the scope of this proposal. To ignore the overwhelming objections of existing neighbors would be folly and unfair. In our view, neighbors in the Port are willing to accommodate a reasonable compromise with the development team — but need the backing of City Hall to help them leverage such a negotiation.

The next round of planning needs to include key stakeholders from the outset, including the Port Norfolk Civic Association, which is composed of longtime and new residents who have a clear understanding of the real world limitations of the peninsula. They've lived through a bridge replacement project in the 1990s, for example, that required a Boston Fire truck and ambulance to be pre-positioned in the Port because access to the neighborhood is so severely limited.

There will be those who regard opposition to this project as a case of NIMBYism pure and simple. That's not a fair assessment. There's a good project here somewhere. Our officials in Boston City Hall can help make that happen by insisting that the development team come to the table to make those adjustments over the coming months.

— Bill Forry

Building a future for all of us

By Marty Walsh

I'm lucky to call Boston home. My parents immigrated here with little more than their hope for a better life. They raised me in Dorchester, where I learned the value of hard work, second chances, and standing up for what you believe in, no matter what.

And this city made my dream come true.

As mayor, I have fought every day to make Boston a city where everyone can make their dreams come true. Over the last four years, we've made a lot of progress together — improving our schools, building more affordable homes, creating good jobs, making communities safer. Boston is stronger now than it was four years ago, but we're not done. That's why I am running for reelection, so that we can keep working on being a city that works for all of us.

It starts in our schools: We increased the Boston Public Schools budget every year, for a total of $154 million in new resources. We created 725 new, high-quality pre-kindergarten seats, to give more four-year-olds the strong start they need. We added more learning time to the school day for 23,000 students. We built Boston's first new high school in 22 years, the cutting-edge Dearborn 6-12 STEM Academy. We made community college tuition-free for BPS graduates from low-income families so that more Bostonians than ever can go to college.

The results are clear: Our schools are the best they've ever been. We now have 46 schools ranked among the highest-performing in the state. Our high school graduation rate is at an all-time high. And we're not done yet. We have a plan to bring high-quality pre-kindergarten to every child in Boston. And we've only just begun our 10-year, $1 billion BuildBPS program to modernize school buildings for 21st-century learning.

We have also tackled the housing crisis head on. In 2014, I unveiled a plan to add 53,000 units of housing by 2030, including thousands of new homes for low-income families, middle-class families, and seniors. With 22,000 units already either built or in construction, we are ahead of pace to meet those goals, and it's having the right effect: Rents in existing housing stock are stabilizing.

All told, we've committed over $100 million and hundreds of city-owned lots to affordable housing, more than ever before. At the same time, we have provided permanent housing for 1,200 formerly homeless people, and we have ended chronic veterans' homelessness in our city. That's something I'm very proud of.

I know that housing demand is still pushing costs out of reach for too many families, so we're doing more. We're enacting new protections for tenants and we are helping people stay in their homes with a new Office of Housing Stability. And we led the fight for the Community Preservation Act, which will bring millions of dollars more each year to affordable housing, open space, and historic preservation. Together, we are going to make sure Boston can be home for all of us.

I've always believed that a good paying job is the foundation of the American Dream. That's why I've fought to build a strong economy that works for everyone. We've added 60,000 jobs, and with companies like G.E., Lego Education, and Reebok, we have become a headquarters city again. We directed $11 million to job training for thousands of low-income Boston residents; we got hundreds more into apprenticeships that lead to good careers; and we invested $5.2 million in youth jobs.

Further, we are expanding support for neighborhood entrepreneurs with the first citywide Small Business Plan. We've also put job training at the core of our second-chance programs, like Operation Exit, for court-involved young adults. There's much more to come. My whole life, I've stood with working people, and I always will.

In these uncertain times, being mayor of this great city means protecting Bostonians from reckless decisions in Washington. I am the son of two proud Boston immigrants, and I know that immigrant families make this city great. I will always stand up for Boston's people and Boston's values, no matter what.

These are just a few of the big challenges we've taken on. Whether it is our work fighting climate change, our investments in arts and culture, our efforts to become a more bike-friendly city, or our commitments to our seniors, Boston has shown that in the absence of federal leadership, mayors can lead - and that is just what we are doing.

I'm very proud of all we have accomplished in our city in the last four years. Our schools are better, we're building affordable housing, we're creating jobs and job training, and we're making our city safer. But there is more work to do. So I invite you to join me as we recommit ourselves, together, to this work in every school, neighborhood, and workplace. Over the next four years, we're going to keep fighting to make sure Boston is truly a city for all of us.

Marty Walsh is the mayor of Boston.

House, Senate extend fiscal 2017 mini-budget talks into November

By Matt Murphy
State House News Service

The hopes of House and Senate lawmakers to complete a budget deal before Nov. 1 faded quickly on Tuesday afternoon as negotiations, initially stymied over a procedural dispute, have bogged down over a handful of issues, including a gun control measure and funding for youth violence prevention.

The House and Senate are both controlled overwhelmingly by Democrats, but ideological differences and the jockeying for power on Beacon Hill have led to frequent skirmishes in recent years between the two branches.

Those tensions have flared in recent weeks as attempts to produce a roughly $130 million spending bill to close out the fiscal year that ended on June 30 have stalled, allowing a Halloween deadline to pass and frustrations among lawmakers on both sides to mount.

After overcoming a procedural hurdle last week, six House and Senate negotiators began trying to hash out a compromise face-to-face on Monday. Both branches followed up by scheduling sessions for Tuesday in anticipation that a deal could be struck.

But when the House adjourned just after 3 p.m., it became clear that talks were fraught.

"I am surprised to see that the House adjourned this afternoon, especially given the progress we have made on all of the FY17 issues before the conference committee. In all my time in the legislature, and of course in my years as Ways and Means Chair, we have been able to finish the close-out at least by late October. I am disappointed we could not do that this year. Finishing this work remains a priority of the Senate, and we will continue our efforts to come to agreement," Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman and lead budget negotiator Karen Spilka said in a statement.

One issue yet to be resolved, according to sources, is over how best to restrict the possession of bump stocks, which were used in the Las Vegas mass shooting. The House proposed to broadly ban any device that can accelerate the firing capacity of guns, while the Senate focused on bump stocks and trigger cranks, with a narrow path for licensing for police trainers and collectors.

Some of the disagreements stem from the Senate's desire to restrict the spending in the bill to fiscal 2017 needs, and not include money for the current fiscal year that could be dealt with at a later date. Several hundred thousand dollars sought by the House to help cities and towns pay for early voting falls into that category.

House Ways and Means Chairman Jeffrey Sanchez has also spoken publicly about his desire to pour an additional $4.7 million into a youth violence prevention program, known as Safe and Successful Youth, that he views as critical to his Jamaica Plain-based district.

The Senate did not include SSYI in its original budget bill, but one person familiar with proposals being traded back and forth said the Senate made an offer of "substantial funding" for SSYI that fell short of the $4.7 million total and was rejected by the House.

"I don't know where it's going at this point," the State House official said.

While some on the Senate side have come to view the House as uncompromising and intractable, House Ways and Means Chairman Jeffrey Sanchez made clear that he views his position as standing up for how House members voted.

"I appreciate the progress we've made with the Senate. We have been and will continue to negotiate and work through our differences. The House has been clear on what our priorities are and these priorities require immediate action. I am confident we will reach resolution," Sanchez said in a statement.

The House has also already agreed to the Senate's higher request for $8.7 million in National Guard tuition reimbursements and to carry over $900,000 for the Department of Mental Health and $1.8 million for the Center for Health Information Analysis in unspent funds from the fiscal 2017 budget into fiscal 2018.

Those compromises were reflected in the revised budget bill that cleared the House last week.

Stroke survival not always based on victim proximity to hospital

By COLIN A. YOUNG
STATE HOUSE
NEWS SERVICE

The nearest hospital may not always be the best hospital for a victim of a stroke, according to experts and lawmakers hoping to bring Massachusetts into line with modern advances in treating strokes.

The goal of first responders assisting a patient who had a stroke is to get the patient to the nearest hospital as quickly as possible, Sen. Michael Moore said, but different types of stroke respond better to different types of treatment.

Patients with strokes caused by emergent large vessel occlusion (ELVO) can increase their life expectancy by five years, save up to $23,000 in health care costs and shorten their hospital stay by an average of four days if they get specialized treatment that is only available at certain hospitals, the American Stroke Association said.

Moore and Rep. Paul Brodeur filed legislation (S 1245/H 3226) that would set up protocols for emergency responders to determine whether the patient is suffering from ELVO and needs to be directed to a certified stroke center, even if that's not the closest hospital.

"The procedures would help responders evaluate the type of stroke and whether or not the patient is suffering from an ELVO. If this were the case, the patient could be redirected to the nearest qualified hospital immediately," Moore said at a stroke awareness event at the State House.

Brodeur said, "We are going to endeavor to direct patients in crisis to the place where they can get the most effective help, and that is not always the closest place."

Every 40 seconds, someone in the United States has a stroke and for every minute that stroke goes untreated nearly 2 million brain cells die, the American Stroke Association said. For the best outcome, a stroke victim should go into surgery within six hours.

In 2015, 2,475 people in Massachusetts died of a stroke, making it the fifth most common cause of death. Strokes cost an estimated $1.525 billion in Massachusetts in 2010 and are expected to cost $2.49 billion by 2020, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

Moore said the language of his bill was included in the Senate's version of the fiscal 2017 budget but was struck from the conference committee report in negotiations with the House.

Carney earns another 'A' for safety

Carney Hospital has earned another "A" safety rating from a national nonprofit health care organization. The Leapfrog Group released its letter grades on Tuesday. Carney was among 832 hospitals nationwide that earned an "A" for its commitment to keeping patients safe and meeting the highest safety standards in the U.S.

"This recognition is only possible because of the tremendous level of dedication from our staff and their commitment to provide high quality convenient care to the communities we serve", said Carney Hospital President Walter Ramos. "This prestigious award from The Leapfrog Group demonstrates Carney Hospital's patient safety outcomes are among the very best in the nation."

"It takes consistent, unwavering dedication to patients to achieve the highest standards of patient safety. An 'A' Safety Grade recognizes hospitals for this accomplishment," said

Leah Binder, president and CEO of The Leapfrog Group. "We congratulate the clinicians, Board, management and staff of Carney Hospital for showing the country what it means to put patient safety first."

Insurance and Investments

A good financial strategy is not just about "making money;" it is also about protection.

Provided by Brian W. O'Sullivan, CFP, ChFC, CLU

Some people mistake investing for financial planning. Their "financial strategy" is an investing strategy, in which they chase the return and focus on the yield of their portfolio. As they do so, they miss the big picture. Investing represents but one facet of long-term financial planning. Trying to build wealth is one thing; trying to protect it is another. An effort must be made to manage risk.

Insurance can play a central role in wealth protection. That role is underappreciated - partly because some of the greatest risks to wealth go unnoticed in daily life. Five days a week, investors notice what happens on Wall Street; the market is constantly "top of mind." What about those "back of mind" things investors may not readily acknowledge?

What if an individual suddenly cannot work? Without disability insurance, a seriously injured or ill person out of the workforce may have to dip into savings to replace income. As the Council for Disability Awareness notes, the average length of a long-term disability claim is nearly three years. Workers' compensation insurance will only pay out if a disability directly relates to an incident that occurs at work, and most long-term disabilities are not workplace related.

What if an individual suddenly dies? If a household relies on that person's income, how does it cope financially with that income abruptly disappearing? Does it spend down its savings or its invested assets? In such a crisis, life insurance can offer relief. The payout from a policy with a six-figure benefit can provide the equivalent of years of income.

Why do people underinsure themselves as they strive to build wealth? Partly, it is because death and disability are uncomfortable conversation topics. Many people neglect estate planning due to this same discomfort and because they lack knowledge of just how insurance can be used to promote wealth preservation.

The bottom line? Insurance is a vital, necessary aspect of a long-term financial plan. Insurance may not be as exciting to the average person as investments, but it can certainly help a household maintain some financial equilibrium in a crisis, and it also can become a crucial part of estate planning.

BOYS & GIRLS CLUBS OF DORCHESTER

Halloween Fun

Our Early Education & Care students trick-or-treated through the Club on Halloween

Vertex Volunteers

Generous volunteers from Vertex Pharmaceuticals spent last Friday morning with us, sprucing up our space in partnership with Boston Cares. They painted the lobby in our McLaughlin Youth Center, as well as the lobby in the Marr Clubhouse and the School-Age room. They also created 75 STEM Kits and made hats and scarves at the Walter Denney Youth Center, and replaced the Fibar on the playgrounds. They really refreshed our spaces and had a great time doing it. Thanks Vertex and Boston Cares!

Destination U

Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester is looking forward to hosting the 4th annual Destination U. The event is an Opportunity Fair for life after high school, including college and career information and inspiration.

The event is designed to be an informative evening of college and career panel discussions with admissions officers, alumni, current university students, professionals and college access counselors.

Destination U is taking place on Thursday, November 9th starting at 6:30PM, and is open to all area teens, both members and non-members of Boys & Girls Clubs of Dorchester. Teens are encouraged to attend and to bring their friends. We are hoping for a great turnout!

Additionally, there will be scholarship information, raffle prizes, food, and a chance to win Club & collegiate gear. It will be a fun time for all who attend.

For questions or to RSVP email Joel Figueroa at jfigueroa@bgcdorchester.org.

"Those of us that are Irish-Americans must be on the front lines to continue to fight and welcome immigrants — to protect them from persecution, and protect them from hate," he said. "Many of our [Irish] ancestors and relatives who came to this country were undocumented. We should never forget that."

The mayor said that it was only fitting that the BIR honors continue to be conscious of the plight of immigrants Boston, for they are the people who built and continue to build our city.

He added: "It's important for us today ... to remember that those immigrants coming today will be the leaders of the future. Some day they'll be somebody standing, maybe at this microphone, maybe at this luncheon, whose mother might have come from Honduras and whose father might have come from El Salvador and they met at a hall or restaurant in East Boston. Twenty-five years later... their son or daughter could become mayor of Boston. And we hope that the immigrants 25 years from now are treated better than the immigrants of today are being treated."

Cullen echoed Walsh's sentiments in his remarks concluding the luncheon, chiding those who would willfully ignore their own immigrant past and turn a blind eye to the current plight of those seeking a better life in America. As a group that "faced institutional discrimination for generations," Cullen noted, the Irish should not forget their past just because their social status in America has changed over the last century.

"If anyone should be tolerant and welcoming, it's the Boston Irish," he declared. "If anyone should show solidarity for people who might be shunned or derided for being nothing more than themselves, it's the Boston Irish."

After writing a story earlier this year about Francisco Rodriguez, an immigrant from El Salvador facing the threat of deportation, Cullen said he received several racist emails from people "with Irish surnames." He went on to denounce the hypocrisy of Irish Americans who would denigrate the very group they were once part of.

"Being Irish in a city where it once brought scorn now brings responsibility," Cullen continued. "Part of being Irish is knowing your history. And if you're really Irish, if you're Boston Irish, you should always stick up for the underdog— the people who get stereotyped and screwed— because that used to be us."

Other speakers at the event included honoree Tom Tinlin, who spoke about dedicating his work to raising awareness about brain aneurysms after undergoing surgery for one earlier this year. Nora Kennedy, representing her family in receiving their award, emphasized the need for the next generation of Boston Irish to carry on the values taught to them by their elders.

This year's luncheon committee was chaired by Aidan Browne, partner at Sullivan & Worcester and chairman of the Boston Friends of the Gaelic Players Association. In his speech, Browne shared his excitement for the upcoming Fenway Hurling Classic on Nov. 19, which he described as "the biggest Irish event in Boston in almost 100 years." Tickets to the tournament were raffled off at the event.
